the Tenure of Office Bill to reform abuses in the power claimed by the executive, and Mr. Evarts, the Attorney-General, in an opinion with reference to Mr. Rollins's case, recognizes this intention, and in that instance gave it its full force. The power to fill office must rest with the Government of the United States. Congress possesses the power to pass all laws necessary and proper to carry this authority into effect. Suppose, while the Senate is in session, the President neglects to make a nomination; certainly the Senate would have the power to appoint, as some one must be entrusted with the STORE SHADES MADE AND LETTERED IN A A NEW ARTICLE OF FOOD!
