—Some workmen employed in the construction of the new bridge over the river Sarthe, at Juille, France, were recently surprised by the appearance of what they mistook for a wild man. The object in question was none other but a young English nobleman, dressed in boating costume, with a large sun hat, in an outrigger, in which he had rowed down the river from Alencon to Mans, and was proceeding toward the Loire. On arriving at a dam in the river he plunged into the water and lifted his boat over. He was accompanied by a favorite dog. The French papers describe him as Sir Wallace. describe him as Sir Wallace.
