o'clock in the morning three policemen, with others, appeared and drove out of the poll the affiants; that the election was held by those not regularly appointed or elected. There was also an allegation that although 574 names were upon the assessment list, but 219 votes were polled.

A long discussion followed in regard to the power of the court to interfere, and at 12 o'clock a recess for one hour was taken to enable the

At one o'clock Judge Allison delivered an oral opinion, ruling that under the adjudicated cases the Court could not interpose by injunction in a case where an election was held, although alleged to be "undue." The act of Assembly refers these countries the court relationships of the second rules.

alleged to be "undue." The act of Assembly refers these questions to a special tribunal for determination, and a Court of Equity cannot supercede the statute and commit indirectly. This and the decisions of the courts settles this question, for the courts have never interfered with the return judges in a case where the allegation was that of an undue election, such as was held, it is alleged, in the Tenth division, Nineteenth Ward. To interfere would be doing something that the law does not permit us to do. If we should undertake in this proceeding by bill in Equity to determine this question, we should have to decide that the officers who were turned away were the duly elected or duly appointed officers, and decide that those who acted had no right to do so. We cannot, in this collateral proceeding, decide that
