However, there was but one residence further North than the house of which I was an inmate and it was inhabited by a dence further North than the house of which I was an inmate, and it was inhabited by a canny Scot, who never knew what it was to take a day's relaxation, his entire energy, had, however, a penchant for minnow, for I had, however, a penchant take a day's relaxation, his entire energy, early and late, being devoted to the improvement of his homestead. Shortly after my arrival I paid a visit, but I found that information on shooting matters would have to be obtained through my own exertions, for more than a complaint against bruin occasionally depriving him of a pig, he knew literally depriving him of a pig, he knew literally and late and the minnow, for I saw one captured on the hook. As the wild fow migrate this is a splendid strand; for if the weather is in the least stormy, with an indication of cold, the ducks keep passing all day, and their flight invariably is so low that they are well within range. In wandering about the neighborhood of my temporary residence, about two miles from home, I came upon one of those beautiful little sheets of water so frequently found upon the northern portion of the American continent. This soon became a favorite retart, for wild ducks were numerous on a portion where wild rice grew luxuriantly, and wood pigeons and spruce grouse had adopted it as a watering place, from its freedom of intruders. All devoted admirers of nature know what a pleasure it is to be alone where none of man's work mars the prospect, came from the Creator's hands, unsullied and unchanged. The Academie des Beaux Arts, Paris.—By the death of Count Walewski a vacancy has occurred among the membres libres of the Academie des Reavy Arts Paris. These descriptions are readily when mixed with cold water; its odor being that of good saffron, and equally strong. attempt their manufacture, they never do it successfully. On the following day, with my birch bark on my shoulders, looking like gigantic letter T, I crossed the portage ith a formidable array of lines and artificial bait, full of most mischievous intent towards the finny tribe. This day the surface was broken by that desirable ripple, whether it be for trolling or fly fishing, and dark clouds occasionally darkened with their shadow the face of the water. With exhilarating free-dom deep I dipped my paddle, pushing for the rocky end, waiting till I had crossed the centre of the lake before I commenced to fish, for, as a rule, unless there should hap-pen to be a reef, seldom many fish will be by the death of Count Walewski a vacancy has occurred among the membres libres of the Académie des Beaux Arts at Paris. These members are elected by the votes of all the existing members of the five sections of that body. The intention of appointing them is to confer distinction upon persons who have contributed to the knowledge and cultivation of any of the fine arts by their writings and ken far from the margin.

When alone in a canoe one line will be ound as much as can be conveniently atquires both hands. Getting under good headway I soon had twenty-five to thirty yards of line astern, with a few inches of red of any of the fine arts by their writings and competing with ordinary hay saffron, and the among them, and the late Count Waleski had moment or two afterwards a fish hooked. Of no other claim to the honor. There are three all plucky, determined fish, to black bass competitors for the place which his death has Bain states that he can procure almost any give the palm, they are so thoroughly reckvacated. First in the field were two wells in their efforts to escape, first springing known writers on art, M. Arsène Houssaye and M. Charles Blanc, brother of M. Louis Blanc. M. Houssaye founded L'Artiste after the revolution of July, 1830. Under Louis Philippe he from the water; then possibly coming at you like a cricket ball, giving you often more than you can do to get the line out of their way; next dashing to the right or left, and only succumbing when exhausted nature refuse was Inspecteur des Beaux Arts, an office to do more. For two or three hours such which has since been abolished. He is the author of several works of the class which was the sport which continued with never the French call littérature d'alcève, that is to the merchant, his descriptions of animals As I pushed slowly along the shore I came to say, collections of gossip about the Court hitherto unknown to European naturalists, to a river previously unknown to me, and and society of France in the eighteenth century. In the course of these studies he shows from the lake. The edge of this stream was a keen appreciation of the less important painters of the French school of the period— Natoir, Greuze, Caresme, Boucher and their fringed with a dense network of weeds, and the channel had scarcely a perceptible cur-Natoir, Greuze, Caresme, Boucher and their compeers. In fact, his preferences in art rarely rise above the atmosphere of the boudoir and the curiosity shop. His style has rent. On breaking full in view several dozen of wild duck rose, conspicuous among which doir and the curiosity shop. His style has the merit of a certain sparkling affectation, gem among his brilliant plumed race. What a pity at home we could not acclimate this which, though now somewhat out of fashion, is still regarded by most Frenchmen as a pecultarly valuable national product. The claims of M. Charles Blanc are of a more serious order. He filled the office of Directeur des Beaux Arts under the Republic of 1848, but resigned after the events of the 2d of December, 1851 No living writer has contributed so much to out I tear his migratory habits would sadly interfere! The sedgy nature of the shore here predicted pike, so replacing the red cloth by a large Buell's spoon, with some scarlet hooks, I again tried my fortune.

Few have not heard of the muskallonge, the king in stature of the pike family. He i be found in nearly all the rivers and lakes of Northern Canada. Among the shoals and rapids of "The Thousand Islands," on the St. the history and criticism of the fine arts. Among his works, the "Histoire des Peintres Among his works, the "Histoire des Peintres de toutes les Ecoles" is the most extensive and important. His "Grammaire des Arts du Dessin," which was lately reprinted from the successive numbers of the Gazette des awrence, he is said to attain an immense size, even eighty pounds, but the largest that I have seen did not exceed two-thirds of that weight. Such large fish as the above I had Beaux Arts, where it first appeared, is a not on that occasion to deal with, but before serious attempt to sta e philosophically the I ceased the bottom of my cance had a goodly principles of composition and execution in the various arts of design. Numerous papers show of bass and pike; so many that I was isfied to select three or four for present use and smaller treatises testify to his learning and zeal. The Count Persigny, or, as M. Rochefort and Mr. Kinglake persist in calling him, M. Fialin, has more recently announced himself as a candidate. It is stated that he has not away here a great hyper of rate. I could send across for them in the morning; but a couple of bears, judging from the different sized tracks, got at my cache during the night and had the bad taste to maul and pull about what they did not eat, so that I rejected it as unfit for food.

Fish I have always found the most temptthat he has not even been a great buyer of pictures, like Count Walewski; and the world knows of no other qualifications which would recommend him for the vacant chair, except his social position and the favor of the Emperor. It will be curious to see whether the artists will on this occasion follow the exing bait with which to attract Bruin into a trap, so I built a bower house and hung up the bait at the end of it, with my trap nicely hid over with leaves; still all would not de: ample of their brethren of the Académie Francaise by electing a candidate known to be distasteful to the Government. The claims of M. Charles Blanc are, however, so superior to those of either of the other candidates that the electors are headily be he and his companion were too wide awake. or had left the neighborhood. This lake I often visited again, and with equal success; the influences of weather never appeared to ffect appetites, and fresh fish is always a welcome addition to backwoodsman's fare. In company of a Chippewa Indian I also tried fishing through the ice. The method adopted is simple, viz.: cutting a bole two or three feet in diameter, over which is built a small hut candidates that the electors can hardly be accused of political preferences if they choose him, although he comes usrecommended by any of the personages now in power. The influence of the Tuileries will no doubt be used in support of M. de Persigny, and M. Houssaye is said to enjoy the favor of the scarcely less influential circle which is gathered round Prince Napoleon and his sister.

in diameter, over which is built a small hut to keep out the light, and sufficiently large for the fisherman to sit inside, the end of his fish spear protruding through the top; with an artificial minow on a few feet of line in the left hand, and weighted sufficiently to make it readily sink, you attract the pike to the surface, when, with a dexterous blow, you drive your leister home. Very much like posching, still where fish are so abundant and wanted for food, this system becomes less culpable.

At the morther and of Lake Couchachin, the beautiful Severn, after tumbling over a grand fall, starts on its erratic, precipitous enurse for Lake Huron. To visit this spot was not more than seven or eight miles of water, through a labyrinth of islands, and along the most picturesquely beautiful shore, wooded to the margin. Beside the fall was a sawmill belonging to a descendent of the French aristocracy, who had emigrated

My Acquaintance with Bulwer, Many of my readers will no doubt remem some culture in Germany that had not reas all of Bulwer's romances. all of Bulwer's romances. "Eugene Aram," "Pelham," "The Pilgrims of the Rhiae,"
"Cola di Rienzi," "The Last Days of Pompeii," and especially "Night and Morning," were at that time more popular in Germany than the noblest works of Schiller, Gostne, and Lessing. I was a youth at that time, and, having heard so much about Bulwer's books, I was perfectly familiar with their titles without ever having read them. Years passed, and although I perused many novels siace then, I never happened to read a word written by Bulwer.

One day I was at Genoa, and while awaiting the hour when the steamer would start for Marseilles, I sauntered through the streets, and stopped at last in front of a large cart, on which, as is customary in Italy, second-hand books were offered for sale. I opened several of the volumes, threw them down again, opened others, in short, I did everything that a dealer in second-hand books has to bear a hundred times daily, and which second volume. "Have you got the first the title; it was a German translation of Bulwer's "Night and Morning," but only the second volume. "Have you got the first part?" I inquired. "Look among the books if it is there," was the reply, for these dealers who buy their books as waste paper never know what works they have got. I looked—looked—looked—but did not find the first volume. Buddenly I heard one of the many persons that were standing around the eart ask in broken Italian, "Have you got the second volume of this work?" "Look among the books lift it is there," was the reply, if many leaves the cecentric wile of the poet, who, separated from him for many. I glanced at the volume which a heid in his among the books lift it is there," was the reply on the second volume of this work?" "Look among the books lift it is there," was the reply on the second volume of this work?" "Look among the books lift it is there," was the reply on the second volume of this work?" "Look among the books lift it is there," was the reply on the second volume of this work?" "Look among the books among the books lift it is there," was the reply on the second volume of this work?" "Look among the books lift it is there," was the reply on the second volume of this work?" "Look among the books lift it is there," was the reply on the second vol and Lessing. I was a youth at that time, and, having heard so much about Bulwer's books, among the books if it is there," was the reply.

I glanced at the volume which he held in his band, and the binding showed me immediately that he had the first volume of "Night or prefer against her husband another charge," and Morning," for which I had been looking. which his political and literary adversaries would certainly turn to account.

I hesitated to enter the house, but I re-"Non capisco, Signore" (I do not understand you; sir), he replied, threw the volume on the cart and walked away. "What a who called to somebody in the courtyard to on the cart and walked away. "What a funny fellow!" I murmured to myself. "He wasts to buy a German translation of Bulwer, and does not understand the German language." I bought the volume for twenty-four soldi, and went on board the steamer. I can assure the reader that I seldom read a book with greater interest; we had already performed half the distance of our trip when I finished it and, profoundly moved, went on deck. The first person whom I met there was the stranger.

Who called to somebody in the courtyard to have the carriage brought to the door. As I was afraid lest Bulwer should ride out, I entered and was immediately ushered by the cobine of his master. He was seated wrapped in a huge dressing-gown, at his writing-table, leaning his head on one hand, and drying with the other the tears of a young fallen into an easy-chair rather than sat down person whom I met there was the stranger. profoundly moved, went on deck. The first person whom I met there was the stranger who wished to buy the second volume of the translation at Genoa. He was a tall man, whose exceedingly pale face possessed a more marked expression of the aristocrat than I had ever seen before. He seemed to recognize me—I do not know whether by my appearance, or by the books which I yetheld in my hand, for he gave a start, came to me, lifted his hat a little, and said in French, "Did you buy the work?" "I did," I replied. "Will you sell it again?" "I will not." "Pardon!" He turned on his heel and continued his walk. When we met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him, "If you the work met again I said to him a say the said in a husky voice, "the said in a husky voice, "the count has made an utterly useless journey.

When we met again I said to him, "If you would like to read the book during our trip, it is at your disposal." "Merci," he replied coldly, "I want to buy the two volumes, and offer you three times as much as you paid for them." It was now my turn to turn my back on him, and during the remainder of the trip I did not exchange another word with him. Other passengers told me he had offended them likewise by his abrupt manner and exceedingly supercilious bearing. I resolved to avenge the company on this gentleman. By means of a small sum of money I prevailed on the steward to slip the two volumes, to which I attached no value since I had read them, into the folded shawl of the stranger. On the fly leaf of the first volume I had written. "En solvenir des 'agréables relathe state of the first volume and offer you three times as much as you paid for them." It was now my turn to turn my back on him, and during the remainder of the trip I did not exchange another word with him. Other passengers told me he had offended them likewise by his abrupt manner and exceedingly supercilious bearing. I resolved to average the company on this gentleman. By means of a small sum of money I prevailed on the steward to slip the two volumes, to which I attached no yalue since I had read them, into the folded shawl of the extranger. On the fly leaf of the first volume I had written. "The solvent of the green which you made to me, and the mortal of the steward to slip the green to had a warpeur Le Veloce de Génes à Marsaille." (In memory of our 'agreeable relations' on board of the steamer Veloce, during the tip from Genoa to Marseilles). I had once seen the same copy in the hands of Nicholas Lenau, your great and a varpeur Le Veloce, during the present which was highly agreeable and very precious tions' on board of the steamer Veloce, during the tip from Genoa to Marseilles.) I added my initials to these words. After our disembarkation, I did not meet any more the singulation, I did not meet any more the singular stranger who, despite his incivility, had made a deep impression on me.

Long, long years elapsed, and I had entirely forgotten the insignificant incident of my travels, when Bulwer's name was suddenly desired on the significant incident of my travels, when Bulwer's name was suddenly decored on my mind in a very curious manner, and I was reminded of the meeting of the more of the three since of the mind and the present of the poet, with its richly adorned walls, its aristocratic splendor, and the mortal wound in the heart of the poet, with its richly adorned walls, its aristocratic splendor, and the mortal wound in the heart of the poet, with its richly adorned walls, its aristocratic splendor, and the mortal wound in the heart of the poet, with its richly adorned walls, its aristocratic manner, and I was reminded of the meeting at Genoa and on board of the French steamer.

At the house where I lived, in London, was a parlor, in which the boarders often met both in the morning and after nightfall. I had repeatedly seen a young German merchant, but had only got so little acquainted with him that I was beyond measure astonished when, one morning, he hastened to me and said. "Have you at this moment."

and the mortal wound in the heart of its owner.

On coming home, I met my countryman, who was pacing the parlor in a high state of excitement. "Do you know it already?" I asked. "I know all," he interrupted me. "Count G—— came too late. He had twenty hours too late the good idea of applying to Bulwer. He will arrive to-day at Dresden, and yesterday it would have been time for him yet to help his friend to escape." "I do not prefer than a word of what you say." I me and said, "Have you at this moment twenty-five guineas at your disposal, so that you could save a man from insanity or sui- he said, handing me a copy of the Times, and cide?" I replied in the negative. He took his hat and cane and turned, with a blank look of despair, to the door; but he suddenly "Count Ladislaus Jeleky, on whom sentence of death has been passed in Austria, has been arrested in Dresden by the Saxon government, and is to be delivered to the Auscame back and said, "It is not for my-self, but for Count G-, who lives at this house."

So saying, he walked away. I was at a loss what to think of this application. It is true, I knew there was at this house a Hungarian refugee, who had been introduced to me as Count G—, but that was all. He had kept aloof from me with some sort of the some sort of the count government would have intercepted his letters and telegrams. He had to go to Dresden and affectation on hearing that I was a German, had no money. As I said before, he thought and I had of course not taken any pains to approach him again. Toward noon; on the Next day my landlady brought me a large package, containing Bulwer's complete works, splendidly bound. On the fly-leaf of the volume containing "Night and Morning" the poet had written, En souvenir du ciel sans same day, I came home from a walk, and saw at the door a hack into which a carpetbag was laid. On entering the parlor I saw the Count. nuage d'Italie et de la sombre nuit dans

I do not trust this woman (pointing to the landlady); would you therefore, be letter, and forward it to the address which I will send you to-morrow?" "With great pleasure," I replied; "inform the lady that I am to receive your letter."

He did so, shook hands with me, and set A quarter of an hour afterward the landlady told me that a gentleman wished to see me, as she had informed him that Count G had authorized me to receive letters, &c., destined for him. She handed me the

I hastened down to the parlor, opened the door, and recognized at a glance, despite the many years which had elapsed since then, my proud fellow-traveler on board the Veloce.

"Where is Count G—?" he said to me hastily.

"He left half an hour ago."

"Are you a friend of his?"

"No." And I told him how he came to Committee. Last night a colored man named "Are you a friend of his?"
