old and sick, issued rations through the latter part of the winter and spring, requiring of the applicant a paper from the teachers, certifying that they were needy and worthy of government aid. This, of course, involved a good deal of inestigation upon our part to secure us against mposition, for the applicants were not only those who needed help, but we were beset by the indolent and avaricious, who would come with their smooth stories of poverty widowhood and a family of children to support, so that it required patience and wisdom to know just how to deal with all these different cases. I do not think, however, the colored people are any more given to deception in this particu-ar than any other class in a similar condition. Those who have to do with benevolent eocieties know that you have the same class here—you have it everywhere; it only proves the one nature running through the whole human family.
