he recommends the sale of six railroads now in the hands of the receivers appointed by him in behalf of the State, the proceeds to be applied in the reduction of the State debt. He also recommends that no further aid be given to railroads except to three which he mentions, in which the State has large interests which it would lose if aid should be denied them. He recommends that measures be adopted to wind up the Bank of Tennessee forthwith.

In regard to the extension of the franchise, he suggests that there should be discrimination exercised concerning those who were in rebellion. They are not all alike culpable for the past, nor untrustworthy for the future. There are those who were involuntarily driven into the service of the rebellion, and who, since its utter failure, have given evidence that they accept the result in good faith, that they were good citizens, quiet and law-abiding. These have strictly observed their parole—that they will not use political power to proscribe and degrade those whom war has emancipated and invested with the rights of citizens.
