next number.
"Launt Thompson's life-size statue of General

Bedgwick was formally uncovered to the public at West Point on the 21st day of last October. A hundred years ago, where fifty oaths are men-tioned, it is not deemed necessary to state the au nant picture—a New England cloermin in full operation, with well-disposed groups of figures. Lambdin, Shattuck, Brevoort, Eastman Johnson, Bradford, Edwin White, and Whiteredge, have also feturned, pretty well supplied with their summer work. At the time of writing, none of the artists have settled back into their quiet studied bife, and the further notice of the many the party to which these people belong, yet they contend that the Recorder has no right to administer an oath. If I am not mistaken, Mr. Hirst gave an opinion to Governor Packer that he had the right to appoint a Recorder, notwithstanding the Constitution and act of consolidation. We come now to the last point, which is the difference between the body and the oath as presented by the consolidation of 1854 and the act of 1859. at West Point on the 21st day of last October. A number of cannon, captured during the war from the Confederates, form the material of which it was cast, having been furnished by the Government for this purpose. The statue represents the General in the military dress he was accustomed to wear when on duty in the field—the dress in which he was most familiar to his men, and in which he met his death in the Wilderness. Thompson has managed his material with great skill. The figure is well posed, the face dignified and thoughtful in expression, and in every line act of 1889.

There are to-day five cases of municipal offiwhich he met his death in the Wilderness. Thompson has managed his material with great skill. The figure is well posed, the face dignified and thoughtful in expression, and in every line and feature faithful to that of the dead chieftain.

"The next exhibition of the Water Color Society promises to equal, if not excel, that of last year. In spite of the bad weather, most of the members were able to make many studies and sketches, and with the added skill and practice of a year will doubtless give renewed impetus to an art too long neglected in this country. It is to be heped the exhibition will not be opened prematurely, as it was last year. The artists ought to have full time for the claboration of their studies, and it would be far better to defer the exhibition a month or two, than to open it with a meagre or otherwise unsatisfactory collection.

"Mrs. Murray, whose Spanish studies in water-color have attracted great attention at many of our academy exhibitions, has taken a studio in the University building. She is an artists of considerable talent and culture, though her power is clearly shown in her sketches and not in her thority to administer them.

In Purdon, 315, placidum 31, we find in April, 1850, that the power of a justice of the peace to administer an oath is recognized. I do not know where there is a more express statute of the common law on this subject. Would not such an affidavit before one of your Honors be sufficient? Yet I have shown where the Recorder has a right, as a judge, and I can state that we have in the law library a book called Recorder's Decisions. It is by one who is a high priest in the party to which these people belong, yet-they contend that the Recorder has no right to administer of the peace to administer an oath. Now that velocipedes promise to become nasful as well as popular, our French neighbors of course claim the merit of the invention,—the "new conquest made by man," as they grandiloquently phrase it. They have exhumed from the Journal de Paris of the inventiers and the Journal de Paris of the machine on which the legs are generally allowed to rest when not in action, and an allowed to rest when not in action, and an indicator to mark the distance traveled.
