We think we ought to give more detailed information about the programme for the coming volume. We have programme for the coming volume. We have always held this periodical facile princeps among serial publications for the young, but that recognition does not prevent us from contemplating the possibility of improvement. A juvenile magazine like the Young Folks is an adolescent; we expect from it new graces and perfections year by year, just as we look for stronger characteristics and budding charms among the world of growing readers to whom it ministers. The National Review may have attained a stationary stature; the Atmosphere is the entrance of water and the magazine like the Young Folks is an bank or breakwater. But in the present in stance there can be very little doubt that the sand it may be that we shall presently hear of an improvement as a stationary stature; the Atmosphere is the state of and the proper is the state of the State of the Olivarian, and a copy of it was sent to the Kingston Argus for publication. ENGLISH ROOKS ABOUT AMERICA.

An English correspondent speaks of a still later book about America than the one by Mr. George Rose—that Briton of catholic olifactories, equally fond of "simelling salts and small boys." The new volume is exciting among the natives of the Three Kingdoms the attention due to anything so quasi-official as a report from the chaplain in ordinary to the Queen. His comments on it are as follows:

Probabilities of Earthquakes in Europe.

The London Daily News offers the following speculations concerning earth quakes:

"The shock of carthquake which has just been experienced in Ireland reminds us thick, though we are so far from the principal European centres of subterranean action, we are by no means exempt from the class of physical calemities which has of late worked such inschiler leaved to the certain of the control of the principal of th earthquake wanted but a small increase of niles an hour. HE LATE MARQUES OF HASTINGS. , ents to sustain Mr. Gladstone, and the fate of th The Extravegance and Public Gamb-ling of a "Fast?" Peer.

The earl's year" has reached a sad climax in the death of its leading actor. The spider and fly drama is ended. That poor coronetted youth who had crowded into six years more Corintal and excitement, and weightler turf cares, than many "fast men" know in a lifetime, has laid down his weary load. He was only twenty-six in July, and he had frittered away two fine family estates. Betting is said to be the touchstone of the Englishman's sincerity, but with the Marquis a craying for the odds had really become a disease. He worshiped chance with all the ardor of a fornatic. His wits were, he considered, worth to hom in the betting ring at least $20,000 a year, and he sometimes threaded his way through the mazes of trials and public coups were often so brilliant that it was hardly to be wondered at that gacity of a wizard. His public coups were often so brilliant that it was hardly to be wondered at that he believed in his own destiny, and his power to break the ring. He cared little whether the draining or other improvements on his Donington estate were stopped, if he only got fresh supplies for enother Newmarkst campaign. The of this week.

They would cluster beneath the Jockey Club balcony at Epsom, holding up their hands to claim his attention, and catching at his replies like a flock of hungry hawks. There he would stand smiling at the wild tumult below, wearing his hat jauntily on one side, a red flower in his button-hole and his problems and cool and cool and cool with the coolers will his peek and cool and cool with the coolers will his peek and cool and coolers. colors round his neck, and cool and calm, while 'the talent' made his horse a "hot favorite" at once; and a few slipped back to the ring to fol-low his lead. For a time he was a perfect Cocker; but he fell at last in the unequal strife, and the men who had "drawn" him most copiously were among those who set their faces most sternly against him when he wished to see the Heath once again.

The Marquis's taste for the turk was not an hemen who had "drawn" him most copiously were among those who act their faces most sternly against him when he wished to see the Heath once again.

The Marquis's taste for the turf was not an hereditary one. His father's heart was with the hound and horn. He loved to halloo "the red rascai" over the rides far better than watching the Leger horses close up round the Red-house turn. The men of the Midlands will speak of him as quite a representative sportsman with Wilt Goodail and the "Bir Harry," whom they lost so see a race; but a scarcity of foxes in Charnwood Forest, or finding himself above twelve stone on the scales, would have sorely vexed his soul. His son cared for none of these things. Still he could see a race; but a scarcity of foxes in Charnwood Forest, or finding himself above twelve stone on the scales, would have sorely vexed his soul. His son cared for none of these things. Still he could not bear to see the Quorn without a master, and he stepped boldly into the breach when Mr. Clowes resigned in '66. He wore the horn at his saddle bow for conformity's sake, but he never blew it, and he let the field go its own way, and hunted the country on no system. A bit of a gallop, a cheek, and then trotting off to sift a favorite gorse for a fresh fox, jamped much more with his humor than an old-fashioned hunting-run, where hounds had to puzzle it out. Often, when his hounds had reached the meet, ten or twelve miles away, he was hardly out of bed, and he would turn up "on wheels," and occasionally from London by special train, and give Wilson the word to draw, when half the field had gone home. No wonder that caricatures were drawn, and squibs flew gaily about, Nov. 1 title and gone nome. No wonder that carica-tures were drawn, and equibs flew gaily about, and that even Leicestershire said it would rather be bled in the purse-vein than have the country-hunted gratis in such fashion. Satirical verses failed to sour him. He took the sting out of their tail by reprinting them at bis own private press, and posted them far and wide. On the last day of his mastership he all pped quietly away to the station, and when they looked for him to give him a parting cheer, he had been well nigh gone as hour.
