Under the Willows, and other Poems. James Russell Lowell. Fields, Osgood Co. On sale at Turner's, late Pitcher's. The present volume is made up, with t exception of two pieces, of contributions periodicals and poems published with other collections. We recognize such old friends as "The first snow-fall," and "How looks Appledore in a storm?" The collection, covering the working period of the poet's sense of nature; yet, for his misfortune, he never is quite at home there: the reader feels broughout the scholar, the man of books. the man of in-doors; one sees that his lyric guide is pale, that his gait is a little 'cramped by the Academic fauteuil, that his voice misses the reverberation of the library walls. In the following extract, for instance, exquiturned the same thought:

Lowell as a nature-poet is at his best in proportion as he forgets all this Puritan paade; and the following extract is admirable for that reason; the only trouble about it is ing out the why and how of the sentiment he so exquisitely perceives:

"Happiness;" it almost alarmed people by what we called its maturity, by its experience in fatigue, so odd and apparently uncalled-for; time passed, and the small, wise verse was found clipped and set into a longer poem. At a recent meeting of the Astronomical So-ciety of England, a globe of Mars was ex-hibited, on which lands and seas were de-liverance from the evils that beset them, the ciety of England, a globe of Mars was ex-hibited, on which lands and seas were de-picted as upon an ordinary terrestrial globe. By far the larger portion of these lands and seas were laid down as well known entities, respecting which no more doubt is felt among astronomers than is felt by geographers cencerning the oceans of our own globe. An interesting description of this globe appears in Frazer's Magazine. To the lands and seas, developed in the planet, are applied the names of those astron-omers whose researches have added to our knowledge on the subject. Each pole of Mars, it seems, is capped with lice, which varies in extent according to the progress of the seasons. Around each cap is a polar sea, the northern sea being termed the Schroter Sea; the southern, Phillips Sea. The equa-torial regions of Mars are mainly occupied by extensive continent, Herschel I (Sir W.) Conti-nent. Between Dawes and Herschal Continents flows a sea ahaped lize an hour-glass, called Kaiser Sea, the Continents flows a sea shaped like an hour-glass, called Kaiser Sea, the large southern ocean out of which it flows be-ing denominated Dawes Ocean. Between Madley and Dawes continents flows Dawes Straita, connecting a large southern ocean and a northern sea, named after Tycho. Herschel continent is separated from Secchi continent by Higgins inlet, flowing from a large southern sea, termed Maraldi Sea. In like manner Bessel inlet, flowing out of Airey Sea (a northern sea) separates the Madler and Secchi continents. Dawes Ocean is separated into four large seas, and large tracts of lie between, but whether they are islands or not is not certain. In Delarue Ocean there is a small island, which presents so bright and glittering an aspect as to sug-gest the probability of its being usually snow-

and bottle-necked seas. These features are wholly distinct from anything on our earth. For instance, Higgins inlet is a long, forked stream, extending for about three thousand miles. Bessel inlet is nearly as long, and Neamith inlet still more remarkable in its miles. Bessel inlet is nearly as long, and Nesmith inject still more remarkable in its form. On our earth, the oceans are three times as activities as the continents. On Mars, a very different arrangement prevails. In the first place, there is little disparity be-tween the extent of oceans and continents, and then these are mixed up in the most complex manner. A traveler by either land the planet without leaving the e are the land and seas of Mars intertwined.
