BY JOHN O. WHITTIER. The day's sharp strife is ended now, The only a snarp strike is choweth how ! As on the thronged, unrestful town The patience of the moon looks down, I wait to hear, beside the wire, The voices of its tongues of fire. Slow, doubiful, faint, they seem at first; Be strong, my heart, to know the worst l Hark !--there the Alleghanics spoke; That sound from lake and prairie broke!

AFTER ELECTION.

That sunset-gun of triamph rent The allence of a continent !

That signal from Nebraska sprung, This, from Nevada's mountain tongue 1 Is that thy answer, strong and free, O loyal heart of Tennessee? What strange, glad volce is that which calls From Wagner's grave and Sumter's wall From Mississippl's fountain-head A sound as of the bison's tread ! There rastled freedom's Charter Oak! In that wild burst the Ozarks spoke!

Cheer answers cheer from rise to set Of sun, We have a country yet!

The praise, O God, be thine alone! Thou gives not for bread a stone; Thou hast not led us through the night To blind us with returning light; Not through the furnace have we passed, To perish at its month at last.

O night of peace, thy flight restrain O night of peace, my night restant : November's moon, be slow to wane l Shine on the freedman's cabin floor, On brows of prayer a blessing pour; And give, with full assurance bless, The weary heart of Freedom rest! intic. for January.

A Visit to Burns's Home. It was a lovely morning as we sailed into the harbor of Ayr. In the distance west-ward could be seen green islands and the land cliffs of Arran, and the mull of Canire. To the north was the barren Troon, spetted with its clean-looking houses, as though they had sprung fresh from the ground. Southward, Ailsa-craig rises out of

The floor o this room is stone and deeply worn. Any one seeing it could not doubt that it had long been trod by olden feet. Through the entry we passed into what was the best room. Here the walls are hung with pictures asso-ciated with the life of the poet. the winding course of the Doon-marked by its green drapery of woodland. Far around the surface was charmingly varied. The land, the sky and the sualight conspired to make the most lovely picture. The monu-ment is enclosed with about an acte of land. This is ornamented with ivies, hollies, yow and plane trees, pines, hawthorns and moun-tain ashes. The walls are curiously lined with bright flowers. A little way down from the monument is a rustic building, in which may be seen the statues of Tam O'Bhanter and Souter Johnny-comical characters truly. I do not wonder Burns wrote an epic, taking them for his herces. Bidding adleu, with feelings of reluctance, to these fair works of art, consecrated by the sweetest and noblest genius, we descended upon the Auld Brig, over which Tam drove his Meg at full speed, with witches and war-locks at her heels, till the keystone of the arch was rocked, and pouring water put an end to the chase. We were surrounded by "Babks and braes o'bonny Doon."

Surely nature is endeavoring to give it a green old age. From the top of the brig we went down uuder its bigh arch of nearly a hundred feet span. In the suburbs are seen some stalely, residences, owned by relified merchants who have been fortunate in this word's riches. Having taken a look at the town, we turned our steps south and eastward, over a smoothing which is and can soar to the skies; that some ting is noble, and is what the poet would and oak. Now and then we would eatch gimpees of cottages and mansions through thickly shady branches. Before we were scarcely aware of it, we had walked the dia-tance of some three miles, and really,-here we found ourselves at the door of Burne's Cot-tege. Could it he possible that Sootland's greatest poet first opened his eyes upon the mortal m this humble thatched house? It a low, one-story building, with additions at cach end. We cared not for the new; it was what had been sanctified by Robert Burns we would see. So we entered the part which remains unaltered. We first passed into the room in which he was born. their drudge, to whom is deputed all the business distasteful or held infra dig. by the rest. Like the proud sisters in the fairy tale, they have their Cinderella in the kitchen; which is a very short-eighted shirk and an ostrich-like policy, as society is more likely to judge a whole family by its low-est representative than to ignore him allogether, and take the others at their own estimate. Appear-ances as such incline, of course, to make the best of things. "putting the best leg foremost." But it? things, "putting the best leg foremost." But it's is needful, beyond all things, not to go for too much. In the case of young people of limited income, the ill-portioned scions of luxurious so-wound they once received, and outraging feelings in their turn which they row disregard because the world and its ways stand but in a alippery and receding relation to themselives, and can do nothing more for them. But even before we are old in this sense, the fact of being our own mas-ters is very apt to make us defant of the conventional restraints which we think wholesome for other people. Few per-sons, however, are so loose of ties and obli-gations as to be justified in this indigence. A man who persists in disregarding appearances is a nuisance to all his belongings. There is often malightly, or at the best a concelted notion of superiority to finery and projudice, in the ag-gressive line which is taken towards appear-ances. A wise man will respect them, even where he does not see the sense of them, because they represent realities to some minds, because
