after the breaking out of the fire. At that time he was noticed going into the building from the door on Cherry street. It was his invariable custom to return to the engine house after going to a fire, but Thursday being New Year's eve, and he being of a lively disposition, his absence was not taken into consideration. On Friday afternoon his wife made inquiry for him at the engine-house, but the members who were present concluded that he was somewhere about town. She returned to her home, and on Saturdayshe again called, and his continued absence led, them to believe that he had possibly lost his life at the fire. Passengers over the Ferries.—The Camden and Philadelphia Steamboat Ferry Company in 1868 passed over their ferry 2,200,000 passengers, exclusive of those who pass on compilmentary tickets, and those who used tickets issued by the other companies. These figures include those who took the various trains on the West Jersey and Pemberton railroads. Up to October 1, the number amounted to 1,900,000. From that period to December 31, there were 800,000, making a total of 2,200,000.

The West Jersey Company during the year carried across their ferry 740,726 passengers, exclusive of commutors and those on the free list.

The Cooper's Point Company carried 202,262, including the passengers to Atlantic City and intermediate stations. The number of passengers over these three ferries make a grand total for the year 1868 of 3,142,988. Only three fatal accidents occurred, showing how careful the mana-
