The Delessert Collection.—Here is a chance for any American city wanting a Raphael or a Rubens for its Musée. Competition for a very select gallery of old masters will be opened the middle of the present imnorth.

The Bûtel Delessert stands in the Rue Monimartre, that is to say, close to one of the boulevards. Outwardly it presents the appearance of a large house in several stories, different in character from its neighbors, which are occupied by tradesmen, but when the vigitant conderges has passed the evisitor at through the great carries and sans, and in many instances they may be the contracted that the rather of a proportion of the present from its neighbors, which are occupied by tradesmen, but when the vigitant conderge has passed the evisitor through the great carries and many instances that passed the evisitor through the great carries and many instances they may be tradesmen, but when the vigitant conderge has passed the evisitor through the great carries and many instances they may be tradesmen, but when the vigitant conderge has passed the evisitor at many instances they may be a possible to the conderge has passed the evisitor at through the great carries and may be a possible to the conderge has passed the evisitor at many instances they may be a possible to the conderge has passed the evisitor at many instances that the conderge has passed the evisitor at many instances that the conderge has passed the evisitor at many instances they may be a possible to the proposition of the conderge has passed the visitor through the great carried and con smen; but when the vigilant concierge show that, in general, those mothers and sisassed the visitor through the great carters took up with those Yankees and Hestofa by the great carters to be great carters has passed the visitor through the great carriage gate he enters a long wide passage which leads to the inner hôtel, the residence of the family. This latter building, faced with a Corinthian peristyle, dates from the last years of the eighteenth century. It belonged to the Duke of Uzès. It is blackened by smoke, and without architectural beauty, but it has and without architectural beauty, but it has the singular merit of being isolated, secret and silent in the very centre of the most noisy, active and commercial quarter of Paris.

Ters took up with those Yankees and Hessians, and in with those yankees and Hessians, and in their husbands and sons or brothers, and are now enjoying over the blood of the aforesaid after driving them on the battlefield. Those acts we have all before us, and it should be a warning to every man to see that he is not killed and destroyed by female acts, and manking should always be careful to see that the human race is not put in any more misery active and commercial quarter of Paris.

It has always been difficult to obtain permission to see these pictures, and since his executors have determined to disperse them, the difficulty has been increased. The great gallery is entered through a conservatory in which birds are singing—an agreeable preparation for the enjoyment of the pictures. The pearl of the collection is without doubt, the Raphael, which has often been engraved under the title of "Vierge de la Galerie d'Orleans." It belonged, in fact, to the Regent, from whose collection it passed firs into Belgium, then into England; it returned to France, and was sold by some mishap at the great Agnado sale, in 1843, for mishap at the great Aguado sale, in 1843, for 28,000 francs. The entire Diplomatic Corps, consisting of the foreign Ministers, Secretaries and attaches, together with the ladies of their families, visited the tive Mansion, where they were severally presented by the Secretary of State to the President, who addressed them as follows:

In receiving you, on this, the last occasion of our meeting, it affords me great pleasure to have by the Secretary of State to the President, who addressed them as follows:

In receiving you, on this, the last occasion of our meeting, it affords me great pleasure to have it in my power to say that nothing has transpired that I know of to disturb that good and cordial feeling which should exist between the government and records of the United States and the rement and people of the United States and the re-presentatives of friendly nations. In parting with you after a varied but most pleasant mutual ac-quaintance, I pray you all, and each of you, to accept my best wishes for your future welfare and happiness.

The President then turned, and giving his hand to each of the ladles, made them a courteous farewell, with assurances of his best wishes for their future welfare and happiness.

Mr. Bertheny, the senior member of the Diplomatic Corps, replied to the President as follows: ows:
In behalf of the Diplomatic Corps, I give you thanks for the uniform courtesies and kindness which have attended our intercourse with the Government of the United States, and we tender you the best wishes for your individual happi-ness, and for that of all the members and author-ities of the Government.

The Diplomatic body then renewing their part-ing salutation to the Secretary of State, retired to Mexican Affairs.

Unfortunately we have yet, now and then some military mutinies which, although although easily subdued, cause us trouble and continue to give us a bad character abroad. One of these mutinles took place at Puebla on the 3d inst., under Don Miguel Negrete. He succeeded in causing a squadron of troops which was on duty there to rebel against the government, and exacting some money, using the most violent measures. He left the city as soon as he heard the government forces were about the town. A sufficient ment forces were about the town.
