The Roman Carnival—The Conversion of the Marquis of Bute. A correspondent of the New York Times writes as follows from Rome:
The Carnival is over, and the Marquis of Bute has come. Of the latter first, as the arrival of this young nobleman has created much and diverse talk. Among the Roman Catholic English, of whom there are many here, there is rejoicing. verse talk. Among the Roman Catholic English, of whom there are many here, there is rejoicing, as there was throughout all the branches of the Roman Church when, a few months ago, this youthful Marquis, hardly entered upon his twenty-first year, made his first public profession as one of its members. Heir to an ancient and honorable name, with large landed estates, yielding an annual income of three hundred thousand pounds sterling, such a convert was a prize indeed; for what must be the influence he could exercise upon his numerous tenantry? It was a skillful web which so early entangled the possessor of this enormous income; and that was a skillful web which so, early entangled the possessor of this enormous income; and that nothing may be left undone here to secure him beyond possibility of loss, the Holy Father himself is to take charge of his confirmation and reception into the fold of the Romish Church. That ceremony being concluded, the Marquis is to continue his religious training under the supervision of Mons. Capel, who accompanies him from home to Jerusalem and the Holy Land. All, this excites the more keenly the Protestant connpervision of Mons. Capel, who accompanies him from home to Jerusalem and the Holy Land. All this excites the more keenly the Protestant contryment of the young Marquis, who look spon it as a cilly, ill-advised and rash act for one who had just attained his majority, with all the great responsibilities attiched to it; to cast aside at once the old faith of his fathers and the established religion of his country, and to throw himself and his great opportunities for good or evil into the arms of an allen and a hostile Church. The actual presence of the convert kimself has revived these widely-differing opinions, which are very freely ventilated, and it would surprise, I imagine, a good many people who have been Into the arms of an allen and a hostile Church. The actual presence of the convert kimself has revived these widely-differing opinions, which are very freely ventilated, and it would surprise, I imagine, a good many people who have been firmly indoctrinated with the faith that no freedom or expression of religious opinion is allowed in the Papal territory, to hear how the case of this young nobleman, and Sunday after Sunday, the dogmas of the Romish Church, and the artful arguments of Archbishop Manning in particular, are discussed and denounced and answered in both English and American chapels.

The Carnival, though limited to six days, and fortunate in the most perfect Spring weather, was a poor travestic of the old merry making of which we hear such glowing accounts. The balconics were well filled enough, but almost invariably by forestier; while the street was given up to crowds of gamins and Zouaves, with whom there could be but little reciprocity of bouquets

SATURDAY, March 6, 1869.—The money market today was not quite so easy as yesterday. The demand for currency was spirited, and the banks exhibited a little more in the cambine parent of say whether money is becoming acare to say whether money is becoming to say whether money is becoming zest to the scene. The truth is, the Carnival, like the costumes, is rapidly disappearing, and but little now remains of either one or the other to show how gay and bright they were. It is the habt of many of the Roman Princes to commence to the evening of Mardi Gras with luxurious supper parties, preliminary to the more moderate self-indulgence which, commencing with Ash-Wednesday, is supposed to prevail during the six weeks of Lent. Of those given this year, that of the Borghesse was more than usually remarkable for its really regal splendor. Selecting one of the large rooms but rarely occupied in their enormous palace, the celling was hung with the richest drapery, while the walls were entirely covered with the most famous pictures—among the chef dauves of the painter's art—from their renowned gallery. The invited guests numbered 120.
