THE PREVENTION OF CRIME. Philadelphia has very extensive provisions for the punishment of crime, and is not altorether destitute of means for the reformation of criminals. But for the prevention of crime very little is done for our youth after they have passed the brief period of pupilage, in which the public school holds out the opportunities of future usefulness and respectability, and the Sunday school supplies some extent,-often a miserably small one.those higher religious principles which, sincerely held and honestly acted out, are, after all, the truest preventives of crime. We have called attention before to the ef fort which some philanthropic and publicspirited citizens of Philadelphia are now making to supply this deficiency as regards one of the classes which feels it most. Very few people, engrossed in their own affairs, and happy in their own homes, appreclate the trials and troubles and temptations of the lads and young cities from distant homes, and, without friends of a good home and its protecting influences. With their scanty means they seek out such poor lodgings as they can afford, and these prove to most of them the gateway to debasement and crime. The miserable accom

These young men who come to our large cities under these adverse circumstances, are eminently worth saving. They belong to a wast class which forms the bone and sinew of intelligence intel The reforms and improvements which evil in the community. To the terrible tide of adult ignorance, lawlessness and vice which emigration pours forever upon our shores, we can only oppose the youth of America, trained up to sturdy, honorable, upright citizenship. DIGGEST OF PENNSYLVANIA, EPISOOPAL ROOMS, 708 Walnut street, Philadelphia, March 10, 1869.—My Dear Mr. Starr: I am truly sorry to learn, by the last report of the "Managers of the Young Men's Home," that the effort to secure the needed sum for the erection that the effort to secure the needed sum for the erection of a suitable building for their use, has not thus far been successful. Nearly five years ago, in my Primary Charge to the Glergy of this Diocese. I brought to their notice the great importance of establishing in this city "Lodging Houses," where young persons coming from the country to seek employment here, could be received, watched over, assisted, and cared for, until they were sately introduced into proper places, and thus eave multindes from present misery and future rain. Since then, the subject has frequently occupied my

Since then, the subject has frequently occapied my thoughts, and the plan which you propose turnishes the best solution to the difficulty of providing for this greatly-needed agency. While there are many societies for the reformation of persons after they have committed crimes, and while such societies appear throught and Christian, there is no adequately organized and equipped according to the authorities of the city of the politan-bred and equipped according to the authorities of the city of the politan-bred and equipped according to the authorities of the city of the politan and more economical for the authorities of the city of the sables and an an antiary agencies as shall provoad disease, that in o wait until the disease couces, and then after a waste of life and means, attempt by stringent laws or beneficial associations to arrest the epidentic soil, is far wiser, even on worlding price of the city of the sease, that the pidentic soil, is far wiser, even on worlding price of the city of the sease, that the pidentic soil, is far wiser, even on worlding price of the city of th familiar to you, and I need not enlarge upon it. It is indeed and to think; that as most of our remedial societies are now organized, persons must become absolute criminals before they can become their beneficiaries; that, in fine, the way, and almost the only way to get before the notice of the good and the benevolent, is through the door of a house of ill-fame, or through the gate of a prison. This is a disgrace to our Christianity, and onght not so to be. I do hope that you may sucsure in placing $1,000 in your hands for that purpose, from a sum at my disposal.

Yours, truly,

WM. BACON STEVENS.

Published This Day: 712 Chestnut Street. THE BLAMELESS PRINCE. AND OTHER POEMS. By EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN;

In one elegant 16mo volume, with vignette by Hennessey. The leading poem, which gives the name to the volume, is Mr. Stedman's most elaborate and carefully finished work. It is a story of human passion, and while somewhat mediawal in theme, the incident—which is dementic and unexpected—is confined to no age or land but its such as may and must happen in all. In the strangth and sweetness of the versification the reader will find a proper setting for the subtle and original plot of the proper setting for the subtle and original plot of the confined and its new follows able for their veriety and for that fine quality which has gained for their author so high a place among our lyric poets. THE RING AND THE BOOK.

By Robert Browning. Second and Concluding Volume. 16mo. $2 00. Both Vols, Half Calf, $7 50. Vols. Half Cart. 87 60.

"Crossing the old square where stands the Palazzo Vecchio, in Florence, Robert Browning paused at a bookstail, and found and purchased there an old yellow book, stail, and found and purchased there an old yellow book, wherein a curious trial is reported, with all the facts, wherein a curious trial is reported, with all the facts, wherein a curious trial is reported. The poem before us, is chaborated from this antique record. The power of language, the effectiveness of words, has rarely been exhibited more fresty than in parts of this narrative:

Browning's vocabulary is exhaustives; moreover, there is an audacity of expression scidom encountered; there are passages of singular tersences and point; sometimes a Dantesque energy, sometimes an Anglo-Saxon sense, cometimes a Southern European flow and freedom, at once triking and combined with original emphasis,"

The motive power is supplied by one of Worthington's double-acting pumps, and the water is conveyed to all parts of the building by means of about 1,000 test of gum hose.

The new machinery was tested at noon to-day with the greatest enceess. The hose was first laid over the roof of the hotel, and three streams were thrown at once in various directions, sufficient to protect the entire surface of the hotel from adjacent fires. The force of the pump was then concentrated upon a single stream, which was thrown with prodigious force upon the neighboring buildings, first upon Herkness's Bazaar, at the rear, and afterward upon the Girard House, in front, reaching the extreme wings of that building. Signal tubes are run to the reof, communicating with the engineron, and the Continental Fire Department is thus enabled to carry on its operations a hundred feet and more above the pumping machinery, with a perfect understanding with the steam engineer. Where are the Remains of Voltaire?

The Athengum publishes the facts (recently printed in the Bulletin) communicated to Taine, the critic, by Mr. Schuyler, American Consul at Moscow, in relation to the last hours of Voltaire; it then traces the fate of the great sceptic's remains as follows:

scepitic's remains as follows:

The body was at once embalmed. The heart was given to the Marquis de Villette, who placed it in his private residence. Voltaire's nephow, the Abbé Mignot, contrived to samggle the body itself out of Paris. It was decked in the dressing gown and nightcap of the defunct, and laid at length in a carriage, so that it might pass for an invalid being transported to the country. A servant sat in the carriage with it. The corpse was thus conveyed to the Abbey of Cellières, belonging to the Abbé Mignet, who, with another nephew of Voltaire's, M. d'Ornoy, and some street, completely over the lofty cornice of the building. Mancil 12.—The demand for our bonds in Europe has been already large enough to produce important effects in foreign financial centres. Within the past menth holders of Inglish consols have been tempted to part with their home securities, and we find, in comparing prices at the London Exchange, that when United States securities were ascending consols were going down. Within the past week, however, there was a reversal of movements in these rival invoctments, consols going up and our bonds descending. The reason lies in the difficulties which attended the formation of President Grant's Cabinet. A delay in organizing a new government in England or any other pornion of Europe is looked upon as a very serious matter, and foreign capitalists and investors have regarded the work of making a Cabinet here as a similar process. Hence the inaugural of President Grant, with the promise to pay the bonds in gold, produced very little effect in appreciating our bonds abroad especially as it was immediately followed by the announcement that the Public Credit bill was a faffure. The eager demand which bad been originally excited was of such a character as to threaten a drain upon the specie of England, and put the balance of trade against that c untry, our bonds being, for all practical purporer, regarded as so much merchandise to be paid for with gold. Sipre the first states of this dismand there has thought that such a relic might be placed where Voltaire's body lay, in the Church of Ste. Genevieve. The Archbishop was consulted; but he smilled, as he bloted a doubt whether the remains of Voltaire could be found in the above church. The tomb was opened, and proved to be empty. Then old men remembered a story of the coffin that had been carried thitter from Cellières having been carried thitter from Cellières having been carried there from Cellières of Ste. Geneviève, and buried in some unconsecrated hole. The heart is now, we believe, in the Imperial Library. The document sent to Catharine by her ambassador in France would seem to show that Voltaire's body could never have rested in the Pastheon at all. All the sentimental pilgrimages made thitter were made to a shrine without a hero. The wo feet of quicklime thrown on the body at its burial at Cellières disposed of what was mortal of the hero. The "Apotheosis" of Voltaire's had ever been brought in the large in 1791 was a splendid farce, and Monseigneur l'Archevêque Darboys probably knew "all about it" when he quietly smiled at the application to have Voltaire's heart placed near Voltaire's body.

house would have been a marked success had it not been for the unfortunate infirmity Mr. Belding is supposed to have inherited. There is no use, however, in crying over split milk, and we now allode to these facts only to do an act of justice we consider to be due to Mr. Keith, to whom our article, written on the receipt of the astonading intelligence of the failure of the firm, did injustice and gave pain. His Honor said that Mr. Keith had been unfortunate, but not culpable, and had acquitted himself in the face of the Court and of his creditors, with credit to himself, and an order was granted for an allowto himself, and an order was granted for an allow-ance to him out of the estate—an unusual cirance to him ont of the estate—an unusual cir-cumstance, proving how very favorable was the impression left on the Commissioner's mind.
