HAMILTON WILD. We have examined with great pleasure three paintings executed by Mr. Hamilton Wild, and now exposed at the Haseltine Gallery. The most conspicuous is that entitled "The Enchantress," a conception in which the whole theatre of a Walpurgls night is condensed, to the fancy, in the eyes, the expression and the attitude of a single woman-figure. This picture is undoubtedly original. The tall, statuesque Enchantress stands, as if alone in an illimitable desert, over a brazier of mediceval workmanship, the smoke from which she seems to mould with her right hand into forms and shadows of evil. Her black hair separates as it falls and clothes her person with undulations like those of snakes. The reddened bars of evening cloud float past her face and seem to take color and being from her breath. The pose of the figure is good. If we have an objection it is to the cutting up of the drapery by patches and trapezes of gold and color; this was the prime difficulty of the artist, which we do not consider he has fully mastered-to devise a costume bizarre enough to be in character, and which would also cluster into an artistic unity. Mr. Wild has also two landscapes. One represents "Spring-time on the Campagna"—a lazyRoman adolescent, himself enervated with the dumb trouble of his own Spring, stretched on a bed of Italian wildflowers, with the Sabine hills and Tivoli road in the distance. The companion-picture depicts the ruined

Basilica of Saint Stephen, on the Via Latins. In both we have grand simple forms a sky which acts only as a relief, and does not, as in the Northern landscape taste, interfere by the perplexity of its cloud-drawing. The pictures have all the accent of the school of Rome, in which city we believe they were painted. We object, with plenty of reason, to the sugary taste in color there inculcated; but we recognize the dignity of planning pictures in large, severe planes, like the successive distances of a bas-relief,-a right Roman fashlon, which has here conferred a certain classic simplicity and repose.

HOWARD HELMICK.

nature, built up architecturally against

Mr. Howard Helmick has sent on a cabinet pic. ture the excellence of which will be a surprise, perhaps, to those even who had a high opinion of his talent. The peculiar gratifying quality of this painting seems to be in a union of felicities, in character, subject and treatment. The plot is of perennial interest, the type of character of perennial interest, the type of character charming, the composition luminous and winning. It is called "The Suitor," but the Suitor is not the prominent figure; he is timidly pleading with Harsh Paternity in the most gloomy and private recesses of the scene, and this condition of things throws into radiant foreground relief the Suitor's innamorata, who is evidently the Suited. There she stands, a monument of palpitating white innamorata, who is evidently the Suited. There she stands, a monument of palpitating white satin, relieved against the old manorial leather-hangings that surround a side-door, and with "hopes, and fears that kindle hope" playing be-witchingly over her face as she waits for the verdict. The sumptuous "properties" of the picture, the satin, the rare laces, the crisp relief of black on white, as well as the rich walls and dim vistas like those of the Hôtel Cluny,—are of the French, Frenchy. But what the French painters of Helmick's grade never do and never will do, is to reach this poetic sympathy in expression, this thoroughly Anglosympathy in expression, this thoroughly Anglosaxon intelligence in reading the soul. Cultivated Americans of a certain rank can only be satisfied now with French pictures, and their preference is reasonable, for painting in the Paris schools is certainly more centred upon the secure basis of a science than elsewhere. But we would like the connoisseurs who habitually buy French pictures of a respectable class, — the chass of Béranger, de Jonghe, Soyer, Chaplin—it they have ever seen depicted in these works a woman who seemed to have a heart. No—to arrive at what we have been taught by our unrivalled literature to demand in this kind, we must quite franchir the boundaries of a nation; we must reach sympathy in expression, this thoroughly Anglowe have been taught by our unrivalled literature to demand in this kind, we must quite franchir the boundaries of a nation; we must reach another race, with whom, amongst all the crudities of paint, we do get faces like the face in the "Hugueuot lovers." Now when Anglo Saxons, (and we are thinking of Helmick) will curb themselves to the teachableness of the French painting-student, while they import their native subtlety of character-study, we may look for a hopeful growth of art. The Briton will not soon do this, but a few bright Americans are doing it, and Helmick is one of them. He gives us, in this composition, technics united with subject. A few more pictures of this degree will have a killing effect on the Béranger, de Jonghe, Soyer and Chaplin company, who give us technics without soul—the draperies of a costumer around the nervous system of a lay-figure.

"The Sultor" is at the present moment in the rooms of the Artists' Fund. There is, however, no public exhibition there, and the painting, though perfectly accessible, is not laid before the public with sufficient prominence. We have no public exhibition there, and the painting, though perfectly accessible, is not laid before the public with sufficient prominence. We have reason to hope that before many days it will appear with suitable kastre in one of our popular galleries. Philadelphia Annual Conference of the M. E. Church.

Fearful Scene in a Church.

For the Warkegan (III.) Gazetto, March 13.1

For some week or two past fix missionary priests have been holding forth at the Roman Catholic Church in this city, and have attracted large audiences, a great many persons not belonging to the same having attended from carries in large audiences, a great many persons not belonging to the same having attended from curiosity. On Monday evening last the church was filled at an early hour. In the body of the church, lighted by two chandellers, and toward the west end, were a number of Protestants. The person in charge of the lampa, shortly after 7 o'clock, undertook to lower the chandeller nearest the altar. It is an iron frame, with the pendant rod working with a screw. Unfortunately he turned it the wrong way, after adjusting the lamps, and the result was to unscrew the two rods, the chandeller falling, and the burning oil spilling over the excited crowd underneath. A general panic ensued, windows were neath. A general panic ensued, windows were broken, and for a time the scene defied descripbroken, and for a time the scene defied description. The doors of the church open inward, and the surging crowd of course rendered the work of opening them almost impossible for a time. A sea of flame, some six feet square, threatened the building, and that it still stands to-day is owing to the intrepidity of a tew Protestant gentlemen, assisted by two or three Romanists. who tore up the altar trepidity of a few Protestant gentlemen, assisted by two or three Romanists, who tore up the altar carpet, which was woolen, and smothered the fire. The accident resulted in badly bruising and slightly scorebing several persons. We are glad that no fatal termination ensued; but that it is not our painful duty to chronicle a terrible tragedy this week, is owing to the presence of mind of a few individuals.
