members were on the floor, endeavoring to catch the eye of the Speaker, and for a few minutes the utmost confusion prevailed, and nothing could be heard but the vigorous raps of the Speaker's gavel. Finally order was restored, when it became apparent that the Speaker would recognize no one until his demand for order was obeyed. Mr. Burdett, of the Election Committee, was then recognized, who offered resolutions declaring Mr. Wallace, Representative from 8 nuth Carolina, entitled to the contested seat, and then demanded the previous question on its passage. This was resisted by the Democrats, who commenced to filibuster by offering a motion to adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays were called and it was defeated.

A message was here received from the Senate announcing the passage of the bill making an appropriation for returnishing the Executive Mansion. Mr. Dawes asked to have this resolution passed unanimously, but half a dozen Democrats objected. Mr. Burdett then moved a suspension of the rules, but this was again met by the Democrats with a motion to adjourn, and another roll call ensued, which occupied the Burdett then consented and the case went over.

For the next twenty minutes various unimportant bills were passed with great rapidity, although confusion existed throughout the Hall.

At 12 o'clock Speaker Blaine arose and sald in accordance with the joint resolution the House was adjourned without day.

Although the closing hour of the first session of the Forty-first Congress was marked with great confusion, yet the best humor prevailed throughout, and nothing unpleasant occurred.

As a single objection would kill a nomination, an artful plan was adopted to dispose of such as were objectionable to the Senator for interested would make the objection, so that he who was at bottom of it need not appear. In this way the case of Collector Bailey and a number of the most important New York Revenue nominations were killed off. After the Senate metal 10 o'clock, an effort was made to get another executive seasion, but it was easily defeated. Senator Conkling and others who thought the work of confirming had gone far enough, insisted that the journal should be read through, and then squarely voted down the motion.

New York Money Market. [From the New York Herald of to-day.]

Arrill 9.—The gold market was excited over an advance optic remarkable in contrast to the steadiness and monotory of the premium during the past month. The rise was the result of a strong "bull" movement on the y-m of a prominent clique to "comer" a Broadway firm who had sold their during the advance attendant upon the failure of a "bear," as noticed yesterday. The uneasy iccling succeeding this failure made the market sensitive, and the "chorts" were frightened into covering. It is well known that gold brokers do business in consideration of a very small margin, and hence the advance threatened to encroach upon their own share of the ir investments for their customers. The higher premium was selisted by no outside influences, the London price for bonds coming steady, while the political horizon, so far as visible to Wall street, was unruffied by a cloud.
