Whether this state Pennsylvania ss: ment is severely true will be best decided by those who know what share Mr. Cameron has had thus far in the applications of Buocessful office-seekers. There is certainly a very general impression that, while the Senator has undoubtedly failed in making many of his points, he has succeeded in carrying enough of them to warrant a slight qualification of this broad assertion.

But what has caused the change in these twenty years? Why is the Senator's influence so much depreciated? Why has he descended from the high position of confidential advicer of Presidents Taylor and Fillmore to that of a disappointed suitor of President Grant? History must answer the questions which Mr. Cameron puts into the people's mouth.

But of all the extraordinary features of this extraordinary speech, none are so wretchedly bad as the violent assault upon the personal characters of two of the recent appointces. One of these assaults charges, the President with appointing a "constitutional drunkard" as Minister to Ecuador.
