BRBWSTEB AND HAGGERTY.

When the late Bishop Doane, of New Versey, was arraigned before an ecclesiastical court, he-made the proud remark: "I will show them that it is hard to try a Bishop." The same assertion of immunity from the ordinary processes of law has been made in this com-munity, for several years past, by a small munity, for several years past, by a small party of men, of whom "Jim" Haggerty may be taken as the type. They do not belong to the lower class of "roughs." They dress elegantly and expensively. They frequent the munity, for several years past, by a small fashionable promenades and places of amuse-ment. They pass in the daily crowds of Chestnut street, unnoticed for anything in Chesting street, unnoticed for anything in their appearance or manners, beyond a cer-tain air of vulgarity which fine clothes and spotsess linen and diamonds and clean faces cannot altogether disguise from practised ayes. But these men, with all this exterior of respectability. have been engaged for years in setting the law at defiance and proving that it is hard to try or convict any one of their streets. in setting the law at definite and proving the streets. it is hard to try or convict any one of their own gang or any one whom they choose to befriend or protect.
