Co., San Francisco. The Journal of the Franklin Institute, for April, edited by Prof. Henry Morton, contains the usual variety of scientific information, popularly treated; the editorial compilation of Items and Novelties gives space to sixteen minor subjects in mechanics an anitural science: Mr. Robert F. Fairthorne in a letter to the Editor, describes a new cement or luting, invented by him, which will resist sulphurle, murtatic or nitric acid; the mach of the state of sods and powdered glass. Civil and Mechanical Engineering, Mechanics, Physics, Chemistry and Meteorology, are severally treated in a number of cases yo various contributors, and Educational Matters and the proceedings of the Institute are noted by the Editor: the number contains five wood-cuts and four plates.

There is always pith and strength in the mombers of The American Exchange and Review: among the extended articles in the May issue we find interesting accounts of Wine in the East, the Fiji Islanders, and the Revelations of the Spectroscope. The department of Mining and Metalingy, ably edited by Dr. Osborn, of Lafayette College, contains the latest discoveries and news; and the departments of Insurance, Money, Transportation, and Arts and Patents, severally embedy information that can hardly be found so well digested elsewhere. This is a Review that one cannot take up without lighting on something that one has not thought of before. It is published by Fowler and Moon, 5:21

At the same time there is, fortunately, sufficient evidence of occasional virtue and undeserved misfortune among this class in California to enlist the sympathies of the good. We await the time when these Chinese articles from the Overland shall be gathered into a book; they would make a useful and entertaining collection of authentic evidence on a new subject. We cannot describe at length the various matters treated of in this well-ventilated, wholesome and spicy magazine. It is simply irresistible. withdrawn to make way for a resolution to adjourn until ten days after Grant's proclamation for a State election. This resolution was defeated by a majority of two-thirds. The majority report was then adopted with few dissenting voices. The debate pointed unmistakably to Walker, Conservative Republican, as the person to be supported by the Conservatives for Governor.

Resolutions were adopted for a better organization, and for appointing a committee to wait on Grant relative to the submission of the constitution, and also on Gen. Canby, and the Convention adjourned sine die.
