For the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin. When the spirit peeps out through thy gi brown eyes, Norah Magee, seems like a light from the far-off skies, Dawning on me! watch with joy those wonderful beams---They are bright as light, yet mild as dreams, And dear as life to me! When the soul shines clear in thy dark brown eyes; Norah Magee, Wy yearning heart to thy true heart flies, Sighing for thee! I feel the love of a life new-born, and forgetting the vow that my h worn, I bow my pride to thee!

Not always the depth of thy true heart lies. Norah Magee, in the shadowy rings of thy strange, swe eyes, Dawning on me; by spirit sinks 'neath the cares of life. nd hides away from the noisy strife, Where very few may see.

But when sunset dies in the western skies Norah Magee, I watch for the light of those starry eyes, Shining on me; As twilight waits for the star of love. eenlike to reign in her sphere above, So do I wait for thee!

cenial narrative has been made up by a tember of Farragut's staff, James Eglinton lontgomery, A. M., of the Admiral's cruise command of the European Squadron of 867-8. This voluptuous pageant of peace-a und of aquatic Alexander's feast, with Timoheus perpetually chanting 'Sweet is pleasure

Malta and the Straits again; an afterthought hen carried the squadron, with the stout old Franklin still at its head, Southward once more o'the' Mediterranean, which passed the fleet on through its whole length to Constantinople and back to Athens; and Sandy Hook bar was fnally crossed, after a home passage of twentyone days from Gibraltar, on the evening of November ninth, 1868. The whole cruise was one prolonged pleasure to the gallant Admiral, whose own high spirits were communicated to the whole personnel of the expedition. Mr. Montgomery's sketch of the journey is graphic and spirited, and is quite filled with he most piquant anecdote. Messrs. Putnam & Son have put out a limited edition of the work in the handsomest manner, in a fine square octavo, on tinted paper, with a splendid photograph of Farragut and abundant en-

As goldbeaters sweep up their dust, so the blishers of Dickens' are apt to collect every article of Dickens that is at all tangible, and longing to seamstresses from levy and sale on erv good gold-dust it is. Hurd & Houghton ave now put together a quantity of his miscellanies, including Master Humphreys' Clock, the Uncommerial Traveler series, the Additional Christmas Stories, &c., in a solid volume, and included it in their neat "Globe" Dickens. The book numbers a thousand tingent interests. No. 47. Extending to all manufacturing or mining companies the provisions of the twenty-fourth section of the act to encourage Dickens. The book numbers a thousand pages, duodecimo, and is completed by a Dickpages, duodecimo, and is completed by a Dick-ens glossary, that is in itself very amusing and , 1849; and requiring the treasurer of every curious, — wherein may be seen at a glance the precise debut and locality of such world-re-No. 48.
