The stock market was excited and inclined to a panic on the announcement of the causes which produced the perturbations of the gold market. The decline in some stocks was almost equal to that which followed the recent announcement of a panic on the London Stock Exchange, and for a portion of the time apprehension was very great. But the immense strength which stocks have acquired this spring, from the large advance in New York Central and expected scrip dividends, ascerted itself and prices only went the higher in the dissipation of speculators fears.
