For the Philadelphia Evening Balletin.] LINES. Dedicated to Miss Jean Ingelow. When o'er the ocean, like a restless dove, My happy thoughts go winging, Do I not love thee, with a sister's love, For all thy sad sweet singing? Do I not seek thee in sequestered spot, Beneath the moon's pale splendor, And gaze upon thy face, so full of thought, And infinitely tender!

Have I not sent a message o'er the sea? Was one small gift not brought there, And kindly placed, where thou would'st sometime see; And haply, drop a thought there? Oh i'might I hope to lift a wing as strong, I'd soar with my libation, To where thou art, earth's shining ones among,

Lighting, starlike, the nation! Have I not lingered in life's dusky hours, To feel thy pure light slauting Across my breast? Have I not culled sweet flowers. Subject flowers of thine own planting?

and when my heart was parched for sympathy, Their dew failed not to cheer it,

But fell like drops of sweetest minstrelsy Upon my lonely spirit! ANNIE E. CLARK. May 27, 1869.

The bustle of the elections, the issue of a new loan by the sity, a short speech from the Emperor. on the question of the day-all these incidents at once we thrown Paris and the Parisians into a ment. To be allowed to talk politics ofce more in public is a luxury which the French alone to be seen that count the men weople have not for a long time enjoyed, and alone to be seen thus occupied. Women seem They are throwing themselves into it with the eagerness and abandon which are so essential a part of their character. One of the worst consequences of depriving a na-tion of its liberties is the difficulty thereby ereated of restoring them to it again. Having become unused to the legitimate exercise of their rights, the people have indemnified them-celves by resorting to all sorts of illegitimate their rights, the people have indemnified them-selves by resorting to all sorts of illegitimate windulgences and foolish and dangerous theo-tries, which they have nursed secretly and in private; and as soon as ever there is the slightest relaxation in the stern-mests of despotism, these repressed feel-ings are the first to break out and manifest themselves with violence. There are electoral meetings being held now every evening all ver Paris, and although in some of these there has been real and serious discussion, and candidates and constituents have come to what was the use of his appearing amongst them? You wish," he said, I believe, also, what is best of all, a very "to re-open and discuss the whole question of the organization of society, and I an not prepared to go into such subject, in the midst of the noise and excitement of an election con-test." And so the Socialist orators have the people all to themselves, and are, I fear, doing him by the ultras is very keen, and the excitea good deal of mischief among the ignorant masses of the French population. These public meeting was announced two nights ago meetings generally end, after immense uproar, at the Châtelet Theatre, in a very populous apl4 w s 24t5 by being dissolved by the Commissary of Police, who has once or twice been obliged to diagram the discourse the and the construction of the town, when M. myself think that such will be the case; for, atthough the extreme parties may make the most noise, I believe that in reality they are far from numerous. all parties to second the regular march of his government in the liberal path which it had traced out for itself," and to "resist the subversive passions which seemed to be reviving and to threaten the unshakable edifice of universal suffrage." This rather roundabout and contradictory phrase has been very variously interpreted, as is the case with almost all the imperial utterances; for while some persons see, in one-half of it, a new declaration in favor of "liberal" institutions, others find, in the second half, that the Emperor stigmatizes as., "subversive" all attempts made to restrict his personal power and anthority, from whatever section of the liberal party they may proceed.

Yesterday was the third and last day of subscription to the City loan of two hundred and sixty millions. All Sunday vast crowds of the working classes thronged the subscription offices to take one bond and have a chance for the quarterly prize of 200,000 francs. The whole affair is like a gambling house transaction. 'The subscription is expected to be enormous, and to exceed tenfold the amount demanded.
