

CITY-BULLETIN.

THE WEST END OF PHILADELPHIA.—London may boast of its "West End," with all its wealth and palatial magnificence, but when compared with the "West End" of Philadelphia, with all its rare natural endowments and extensive works of art, evidences of mechanical skill and American ingenuity, and blending romantic beauty with its grand gigantic bazaar of flowers and fountains, the former certainly becomes rather insignificant. Our "West End" may be considered the whooping of the city. Many a noble and wealthy family have cultivated the highest toned sentiments of refinement, and possessing much public spirit, have progressed with substantial improvements that annually contribute to the treasury of the city such large sums as to greatly assist in keeping the wheels of municipal government in motion. It was in our "West End" that the first military hospital was erected, in the early part of the rebellion. It was called the "Satterlee Hospital." Its location was on a high hill, in the vicinity of the Baltimore pike and the Erie street. The ladies of West Philadelphia rendered very important and efficient aid to thousands of maimed and sick soldiers who the fortunes of misfortune were sent to that beautiful locality of patriotic and noble people. Possessing almost any amount of wealth, the private contributed without limit from their private funds to ameliorate the condition of sick and wounded men. Not only so, but they passed months, we may say years, in imparting moral and religious instruction to them, and now, in these times of peace, there are soldier citizens in all parts of the land who live to bless the kind-hearted ladies of the "West End."

The hospital has been removed, and there is scarcely a trace of it left to mark the locality upon which it rested. The main streets are now open to this part, and the work of heavy grading is progressing. One street running east and west will intersect the old hospital grounds, and the new street will be extended to within a few feet of the fence on the western side of the enclosure. The visitor to this section of Philadelphia will admire its beautiful scenery. Here nature in her dispensations was liberal in scattering profusely around trees and shrubs of every kind, which exude a fragrance soothing, charming, wholesome. It is a delightful beautiful place to visit, and although within half an hour's ride from Independence Hall, yet there are immense numbers of citizens in the eastern part of the city who have never seen this beautiful place. The dwellings to a great extent stand by themselves, in rows, though uniform in appearance. They are built of brown stone, granite, Pennsylvania marble, green granite, and other costly materials. They have gardens front, back, and in fact all around, with porticoes, summer-houses, terraces and arbors literally loaded with roses, honeysuckles, woodruffs and other choice flowers, while here and there, interspersed among the ornamental shade trees, are works of refined art in the varied forms of classic statuary. Fountains with many jets, sparkling like diamonds in the sunbeams, spray their waters in rainbow tints, and dropping into surrounding pools, contribute to the sporting places of gold-fish. It is a such surroundings that make the residents of the "West End" repose in retirement from the more active scenes of business life.

The grading of a number of the streets has been made to conform as nearly as possible to the natural ascents or declivities of the land, and in other places the valleys have been filled, the surface of the grade ranging from ten to thirty feet high. From Chestnut street, west to the Darby road, to Spruce street, almost out to Cobbs' creek, there are continuous rows of splendid dwellings, with Mansard roofs. Hundreds of houses are in course of erection, some of them about to be enclosed.

Skilled mechanics and laborers are busily engaged with all the work incident to building houses and cars in its steady requisition; the work of masonry and carpentry is going on in immense hills of gravel or soft rock, occupies attention; in fact, everything around here exhibits all that wealth, power and public spirit can display, and makes one feel proud of the West End of Philadelphia.

CHRIST CHURCH STEEPLE.—It is 174 years since Christ Church was built in Second street, above Market. Its steeple then was a crotch of a tree in which was suspended a single bell. In later days, as the city increased in importance, the original church was surrounded by the present edifice, which was built around and above it without disturbing the worship of the congregation. The old bell was taken down from the crotch of the tree, and in 1754, the present steeple was erected, its cost, about £2,100, being principally defrayed in a way that would be rather startling to our modern notions, by means of lottery. The old bell was replaced by the fine chiming of eight bells, weighing eight thousand pounds, whose beautiful tones have floated over the rooftops of Philadelphia for more than a century, mingling with all the joys and sorrows of the worshippers beneath, and of the community and the nation abroad. During the Revolution, Christ Church and its bells were the bells being hid away, and only restored to their lofty perch in the steeple at the restoration of peace.

Christ Church steeple is again undergoing the only repair which its substantial character ever seems to demand, a fresh coat of paint. Messrs. Caville & Joy, the well-known house-painters, are now engaged in this delicate and somewhat dangerous task. The company's ladders which surmount the spire have been successfully removed, and will be restored to their giddy elevation to-morrow morning again. These consist of two long ladders, measuring seven feet nine inches in circumference; four small bells, indicating the points of the compass, each ball one foot ten inches in circumference, and two feet two inches in breadth; the miter, two feet six inches high, and four feet in circumference at the base.

The Right Rev. Wm. D. D., D.D., consecrated Bishop of the Episcopal Church of Pennsylvania, February 4, 1857. It is placed within thirteen holes, representing the original State.

When the large hall was taken down it was discovered that it had been made the target of some rascals who had been practising upon it with lead balls, probably from the roofs of neighboring houses. More than a dozen holes have been pierced in the ball by this vandalism. Whether it is an act of recent occurrence or not is not able to say.

The handling of these large copper ornaments, at such a height, one hundred and ninety-six feet above the street, requires much skill and nerve. Although the work is not yet fully completed for the task, and by noon, to-morrow, it may safely be predicted that the old steeple will again be glittering with its time-honored ornaments in all the beauty of their original finish.

The steeple, which has not been painted since 1849, is to be painted white, which will be a great satisfaction to those who have always regretted the brown coat which has disgraced the structure for a score of years.

ASSAULTING A POLICEMAN.—Sarah Price was arrested at Seventh and Lombard streets, by Policeman Dalton, last evening, for disorderly conduct. She then punched the head of the officer. A crowd of men, women and children surrounded Dalton, threatened to kill him, and attempted to take his prisoner from him. Christopher Wilson and William Clark, who were among the assailants, were also arrested. The three prisoners were committed by Alderman Carpenter.

ROBBERIES.—The residence of J. W. Rowe, No. 101 Walnut street, was entered last evening, and a rear window last night. A silver fruit basket was carried off and plated spoons and forks were so battered as to be entirely ruined.

The house of Mrs. Mendez, No. 823 Wood street, was entered by a party who broke in through a window shutter, and robbed of jewelry, clothing and silverware.

DISORDERLY HOUSE.—Deborah Mack, Mary Mack, Emma Brown and Ida Carey were before Judge Ald. Carpenter last evening upon charge of keeping a disorderly house, Front street, above Dock. The complainant was Anna Holland, who alleged that the women attacked her and beat her on the head with liquor beer glasses. The accused were held in $500 bail to answer at Court.

REQUEST GRANTED.—General St. Clair A. Mulholland, commanding Philadelphia City Guards, received a letter from Governor Curtin, granting his request to receive the regiment in fifteen companies. Prof. Bartine, of the Central High School, is making an effort to raise a company among the pupils of that institution, to be attached to that regiment.

ASSAULTING A WOMAN.—John Leech went into the beer saloon of Mrs. Hines, at Fifth and Berks streets, yesterday, and struck her a violent blow upon the head, which fell her to the floor. Leech was arrested by Lieutenant Price. Alderman Neill held him in $500 bail for trial.

LEADERS FOR THE HARBOR POLICE.—Chief Mulholland is now having made for the use of the Harbor Police on the Delaware and Schuylkill, eight small ladders, with hooks on each end. These ladders are intended to facilitate the officers in taking drowned bodies from the water.

BIRTH IN A POLICE STATION.—Maria Falley, who obtained lodgings in the Eighth District Police Station House last night, gave birth to a male child this morning. The mother and infant were sent to the Almshouse.

TO HAVE MORE LIGHT.—Policemen stationed in the rural districts sometimes have great difficulty in patrolling at nights, owing to the darkness. All policemen on duty in sections where there are no public lamps are to be furnished with small lanterns.

FIRE ROPES.—New ropes, to be used by the police at scenes of conflagration, to keep a safe distance from interfering with firemen, have been procured, and were delivered at the different police stations yesterday.

A GOOD MOVE.—Next week each of the Police station-houses in this city will be provided with stretchers for the purpose of carrying the sick and wounded to the hospital, and to persons who may be injured by disasters.

SCALDER.—The steam large Chester, of Clyde's New York line, exploded her tallow pipe, when off Petty's Island, last evening. The engineer was severely scalded about the face.

MESSRS. T. B. PETERSON & BROS. have now ready the works of the elder Dumais, in upwards of thirty volumes, bound in cloth or paper. Dumais, the inexhaustible, the ready, the racy, the inventive, the romantic, the genial, the true, the pure and simple, the active mind would furnish forth a dozen inferior romances. His idiomatic conversations, his surprising and often impossible scenes and combinations, his wonderful and surprising and inspiration that rushes through his stories make him the most inexhaustibly suggestive of companions. One thinks of Monte Christo, the Count of Monte Cristo, the Count of Paris, the Iron Mask, and feels as if an introduction has been afforded to a whole population of actual living beings. One involuntarily bows before this superlative influence, and is irresistibly drawn to the reading of the feeling of Dumais the son, himself a man of genius, who said the other day, in the preface to the Fils de Monte Christo, whatever happens, may I venture to write my names beside each other; but be assured, while she shall read out two names, the one beneath, the other above, on the scale of our century, I myself have never seen in your night but the father, the friend, and the master; that I have had the good fortune, thanks to your proximity, never to exaggerate my own importance, but to consider myself always a child in being obliged to measure myself against so redoubtable a sire.

The Dumais romances, as issued by the Petersons, form a gay and handsome library in themselves. The series will have an immense popularity.

SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' FAIR.—The girls of the Soldiers' Orphan Department of the Northern Home will open a fair this afternoon, at two o'clock, which will continue only this night, the afternoon and evening of to-day. The girls have been industriously at work for several weeks, preparing articles of various kinds for the fair, and besides what they have prepared, contributions of books and other articles have been received from outside sources, for which the thanks of the children are gratefully returned. In addition to the other attractions of the fair, a special treat is the military drill by the boys of the Home, whose evolutions will be of a very interesting character. The proceeds will be devoted to the purchase of a library for the children, and the managers of the affair should receive well-deserved encouragement in their effort to secure it. It is the intention to entertain the children with a supper during the evening, the contributions for which purpose have been received. We hope the many friends of the Northern Home will turn out in liberal force this evening.

ENTERTAINMENT IN AID OF THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT FUND.—A grand entertainment will be given at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, (Wednesday) evening, in aid of the Washington Monument Fund of the First School District of Pennsylvania. The performance will consist of a grand anthem, sung by six hundred young ladies, pupils of the Normal School, and the different grammar schools of the city. A splendid selection of dialogues, and a vast number of songs will be presented, some of which will be new. The entertainment is one of the marked features of our city, and every Philadelphian should feel an interest in its successful progress. The work going on there is a vast one, and requires large resources, hence the call made from time to time upon the liberality of our citizens. We trust numbers of those interested in the prosperity of our city will go to Philly on Thursday and Friday, and, while enjoying the good things provided for them, help on the work, gladden the hearts, and strengthen the hands of that band of earnest workers, by their substantial aid and assistance.

IMPORTANT TO GENTLEMEN.—In another column will be found the card of Messrs. Ogden & Hyatt, capotons, No. 827 Arch street. Their elegant and capacious establishment is daily thronged with gentlemen selecting materials and giving their measure for full dress, fancy and business suits. Messrs. Ogden & Hyatt offer an extensive and varied assortment of fine black cloths and cassimeres, fine English and French fancy cassimeres, Banneburn chevrons, fancy cassimeres and silk vestings, white ducks, drills and Massellies. Ashbridge & Co., Auctioneers, will sell at their store, 302 Market street, to-morrow morning, at 10 o'clock, by catalogue, about 1,000 packages of Boots and Shoes, of city and eastern manufacture; also 50 cases of men's and boys' Hats and Caps, to which the attention of city and country buyers is called. Open early in the morning for inspection.

WE NOTICE with a great deal of pleasure that there is to be a grand Strawberry Festival at Bethany Mission Sabbath school, Twenty-second and Shippen streets. They are to have a fine band of music and other attractions, and no doubt it will be a great success, and add much to the pleasure of all interested.
