these points, and, right or wrong, they were applauded to the echo. We have al-"Shylock" to a thin house, the actors in the green-room wondered how such a noise could be made by so few people. The nightly receipts of the theatre rose so rapidly that the committee of management doubled Kean's salary, and gifts, praises, tributes flowed in to "Shylock" to a thin house, the actors in the him from all quarters. Among his finest hits must be ranked the attitude he assumed in 112 and 114 So. THIRD ST. PHILAD'A Richard III., when the action of the play was suspended in order that he might stand for a while drawing figures on the sand and gazing into vacancy. Of his performance of "Luke" in Massinger's City Madam, it is recorded that an old lady, who had intended leaving him a Life Insurance in the new National Li large sum of money, was so appalled by the cold-blooded villainy he displayed, that she transferred the legacy to a distant relation. We will let Mr. Hawkins, his biographer, speak of the crowning effect in Kean's "Zanga":
"But all was cast into the shade by the un-peakable grandeur of his avowal of the terriwhich had turned the hydra of calamitiesealousy—to his dire intent: "'Born for use, I live but to oblige you; Know, then, 'twas I.'

"His eye lit up with a preternatural brilliance: he long smothered hate blazed forth with fearal intensity; as Alonzo fell he majestically extended his arms over the fainting Spaniar towering over the prostrate body with terrific energy and power, he trampled upon it in an attitude which Hazlitt regarded as not the less dreadful from its being perfectly beautiful. The effect was appalling; the fiery soul flashed out with a look and gesture which imparted a corresponding dignity to the body; Rae (Alonzo), although by far the largest man, seemed to wither—shrink into half his size and appear smaller than Kean; and as Barry Cornwall contemplated the dark and exulting door standing over his victim, with his flashig eyes and arms thrown upwards ('asthough would lay open his very heart to view'), h lought that he had never beheld anything so ike the 'Archangel ruined.' He was recalling to mind the line descriptive of the 'sailroad vans' of the great spirit of Milton when. heard Southey exclaim to a companion, By —! he looks like the devil." Perhaps amidst all his triumphs the most ratifying recognition Kean met with was that which he received from Garrick's widow. She her husband, and when Kean dined with her, she led him solemnly to a chair that had been

Garrick's favorite chair, saying to him. "You tre the only person I think worthy of sitting in it." On Kean's complaining to Mrs. Garrick that the critics often misapprehended him, giving passing over parts on which he had besto the greatest care and attention, the old lady replied naïvely, "You should write your own everest censor. She wrote him the following note: "Dear sir, you can't play 'Abel Drug-Yours, &c., Eva Garrick." Kean reolied more shortly still: "Dear madam, I and the play disappeared from the bills after two more representations. But it is interesting uncultivated audiences. At the Glasgow Theatre he quelled a disturbance by advancing to the footlights and asking, with a contemptuous emphasis: "What are your commands, gentlemen?" In Guernsey he applied to the audience a line from his part— "Umnannered dogs, stand ye, when I comma An apology was demanded, and Kean exclaimed, "Apology! take it from this remark: the only proof of intelligence you have yet given is in the proper application of the words I have just uttered." In like manner, at the Cobing Theatre, being called after the fall of the curtain by an audience which had not appreciated his acting, but thought itself entitle to make him bow his acknowledgments, Kean | Coupons of Union Pacific Railroad said calmly, "Well, I have played in every civilized country where English is the language of the people, but I never acted to an audience of such ignorant, unmitigated brutes as you

A good story is told of two boys living in There was a warm discussion as to which of the boys should carry it, but it was finally decided that one boy should carry i one day, and the other the next; and that the one not carrying the watch should always hav the key in his possession. This watch was the only one in the settlement, and the display of even the key was an enviable ornament. One day the elder of the brothers was to make a journey to the city, to be gone two days; and, after a long and serious consultation, it was determined that he must maintain the dignit of the family by wearing the watch; but the younger was to retain the key. So they bethought them to give it a good winding, that it might run for twice its usual period of twenty-four hours. The key was applied and twisted vigorously for about the face. The little one was taken in fifteen minutes, when they found to their con sternation that the little machine no longe signs of life appeared. So a diagnosis was d termined upon. After careful inspection of the interior mysteries, the elder brother exclaimed, "I have it. Joe! Don't you see that fine hair yank it out?" A pin was at once bent up into hook, and "the hair" was "yanked" out. The watch didn't go any better when relieved of it: mitted to forget about the watch with the ha
