GRANT'S ADMINISTRATION.

A new administration of the Government of the United States always has enormous difficulties to contend with. Most of the active men of the party electing it have their separate theories and policies which they wish the new President to adopt. Most of them have their favorites for places in the Cabinet as well as for the foreign missions and for all the princial offices of their States or districts. To satisfy a few of these is to dissatisfy all the rest, and of course there are heart-burnings, complaints and all sorts of sinister predictions.

President Grant has had his full share of criticism and fault-finding from people of this kind; but it has not disturbed him or made him deviate from the line he had marked out for himself before entering the White House. riod of grumbling has been much shorter than usual at the beginning of an administration, and now, in its fourth month, there is little or no fault-finding, except that which is naturally expected from the papers and politicians of the becoming better satisfied with the President those who voted against him is strengthening the confidence of those who voted for him. in his honesty, his ability and his fidelity to the principles of Republicanism that won their greatest triumph when Lee surrendered to him at Appomattox.

The disagreeable but inevitable and in portant work of making new appointments to offices having been finished, and the disappointed seekers for office having had their full time for grumbling, the people are now able to consider the administration on its merits, and to judge of it by the condition of affairs at home, as well as by its relations with foreign nations. There can be no denial of the fact that the country has become singularly calm and quiet since the inauguration of President Grant, While Johnson was in the executive chair he did all he could to keep the Southern people excited and angry, so as to make it the more difficult for Grant to secure the "peace" that be eraved and promised for the nation. But since the beginning of March there has been a Paris, he cannot need pecuniary provision. neglected or ignored it. marked and a growing tranquility, which has Taris, he cannot hear processor in the Prefecture been produced without resorting to military force and without any of the "despotism"\that the demagogues of the opposition declared would follow Grant's inauguration.
