A humorous article on velocipedes appears in Chambers's Journal. The writer confesses that he has always cherished a peculiar admiration, at one time amounting to swe, for anything that would go round. A wheel has never een without its charm for him. and he cites the authority of other enthusiasts, thus. "Only the other day I confided to an old friend that I still possessed a sneaking regard for wheels, and though he rewarded my confi-that ever sat below a sloping thatch of wool,

There was a copy of Punch on my table. Our conversation turned to the subject of wheelbarrows from looking at Mr. Keene's vignette, in which, some three years ago, Mr. Punch was depicted as Blondin, but performing the impossible feat of two children, and had, during the impossible feat ight rope in the Crystal Palace transept. One thing will at least be conceded by any person who will take the trouble to turn to the sketch, and that is, notwithstanding all recognized notions and experience to the contrary, the picture of man driving himself in a wheelbar row looks strangely plausible, probably from the fact that the mind of the observer communicates motion
