

CITY BULLETIN.

A HANDSOME NEW STRUCTURE.

THE SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH. In Tuesday's paper we printed a short account of the projected edifice for this congregation...

The new building, the site of which is at the northeast corner of Twenty-first and Walnut streets, will consist of a lofty clerestory of 220 feet from the level of the pavement.

The style of architecture is a mixture of the French and English of the thirteenth century. The exterior will be carried out in stone of the following kinds—Richmond granite for the base or plinth; Trenton stone for the greater part of the walling above the plinth line; Cleveland (Ohio) stone for the tracery of the windows, masonry of the doorways, etc.

The principal entrance to the building will be from Walnut street. This door will be 11 feet wide, divided by a shaft into two parts. It will be deeply recessed, its archway head, richly moulded, springing from shafts with carved capitals.

These entrances also lead into the church. In one of the transepts will be a gallery for the accommodation of Sunday School children, and this is the only gallery there will be in the building.

The large window in the principal gable on Walnut street will be of four lights, and will be 17 feet wide by 30 feet high, with a richly traceried head. This window is designed to fill with stained glass, in memory of the color-bearing preacher, George Whitefield, under whose influence the church was founded, one hundred and twenty-six years ago.

There will also be spaces for marble tablets against the wall as memorials of another kind. The pulpit will be placed upon the radial point of the apse, and is to be a handsome and elaborate structure of polished marbles.

CORONER'S INQUEST.—This morning Coroner Daniels held an inquest on the body of James Welsh, who died at the Pennsylvania Hospital on Wednesday afternoon last, from the effects of being struck with a coal oil lamp, on the 11th inst., by Annie Peoples.

Mary Evans testified—Live on Columbia avenue, below America street; was in the house of James Welsh, the deceased, on the night of the 7th of June he was lying on the bed; Annie came in and took a coal oil lamp from the mantel and threw it at him; I ran out at once; it got all dark as soon as she threw the lamp; looked back and saw the place in a blaze where he was lying; it was about midnight or ten o'clock; as she came in the house she said to him "You must be all right; Annie lived up stairs; don't know that they ever had a quarrel before; they had a quarrel that evening; so far as I know, she had been out all day with him; and came home drunk; she had some words then with her aunt, with whom she lived."

Mary Welsh testified—Live rear of 1622 America street; an widow of the deceased; Annie came home about six o'clock and quarrelled with her aunt because she was not ready; they then came down stairs, and continued to quarrel; they went into the yard and cried murder, and called my husband to the relief of my aunt and myself; she told James to go for a policeman and have Annie arrested; he got a policeman and had her taken to the alderman's office; she afterwards came back between 9 and 10 o'clock and picked up a coal oil lamp from the table and threw it at my husband, who lay upon the settee; the lamp struck the wall and broke, when she saw him taking fire she ran out, the blinding oil flew all over him.

The verdict of the jury was: "That said James Welsh came to his death by violence (burns from coal oil) at the hands of Annie Peoples, on June 7th, 1898, at No. 1632 America street; died June 23rd, 1898.
