THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT. There are thousands of people in Philadelnhia who remember the laying of the cornerstone of the Washington Monument in Washngton Square, on the 22d of February, 1833. There was a procession, and there was an oration, and there were other impressive ceremonies when that Washington Monument was thus planted, and people talked with pleasant anticipations of the beautiful shaft that was to adorn the city, while it perpetuated the memory of the Father of his Country. More than a generation has passed away.

Thirty-six years have gone, and Philadelphia make it purer than his life! Exhaust upon it has spread out into a great city. Its boundaries have grown until they comprise the area art: you cannot make it more proportionate of a whole county.. Its population has grown until it is fast approaching a million of living souls. Its buildings have grown until they souls. Its buildings have grown until they largely outnumber the largest city on this Continent. Its enterprise, its wealth, its industries, its charities, its institutions of learning and science and art have all grown, until Philadelphia has become great in all these regards. But its Washington Monument has not grown. It was planted in good soil. It was entrusted to a careful and safe guardianship. But the cor-

When I think of the object which is before us all as citizens of this State—the high duty devolving upon all of us—I feel that we all have reason to look to steamer Bremen in May last. The duty in question, it appears, was assessed under the act of February 24, 1869, which provides that all manufactures of copper, or of which copper shall be a component of chief value, otherwise provided for, shall be subject to a duty of 45 per cent. ad valorem. And the Collector having decided that in all articles made of the composition usually known as brass-copper is the component of chief value, the goods imported by you were subject to duty under said act. I have reason for believing that the position taken by the Collector is correct in regard to the materials of which brass is composed, and as the law in quesa higher power for aid in the noble work i which we are engaged, and I trust that powe will not desert us in preparing the minds of our youths for a better enjoyment of our liberties. But we in this generation cannot hope to close the contest. to close the contest.

Education should not alone be intellectual; it should also be physical. Will our work amount to anything if we fill the mind with information without cultivating the muscle to put it into force? I see around me in everyday life, men of muscular strength, tall, straight and brawny. If intellectual men had such bodies what an advantage it would be! Do not, then, forget the physical culture of the school children. It is incumbent upon us to make a vigorous, hardy, strong race of men. [Applause.] We should [build upon a physical foundation as well as upon an educational one. The question may arise—How are we to accomplish this? I reply, give your scholars daily military drill and other kinds of exercise, and you will make them much better men. "I have aword of kindness for you this morning. Wednerday, July 21, 1869.—It is difficult to-day for berrowers to obtain needful funds at the bank counters, though, if inquiry is made at the banks by one who is not a borrower, they will report money easy. It is the same with brokers; it is their business to deal in money, and it is therefore their interest to put their own color upon the face of the market; but call on the banks and represent your wants and you will soon find out that money is scarce and very dear. It will be generally conceded that the banks are not very extortionate in their charges for accommodation under the circumstances, 7 per cent. being the average on call, but as most of the bank kinds are loaned to note borrowers, and afterward reasold at 10 and 12 per cent., the rates are high enough in all conscience. This should not be, but it is, nevertheless, and there is no other remedy for the needy but to submit to it.

Government Bonds are very quiet and prices unchanged.
