[For the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.] LOVE'S LANGUAGE. Darling ! I've told my love for thee.

To the silent stars at night, nd it seemed as though they listened to me. And their nale eves grew more bright. While my soul went out in its words of love. To those distant, unknown spheres, There came a peace from their worlds above. Dispelling my doubts and fears.

Darling ! I told my love to the wind. As it roved o'er a bank of flowers. And I bade it go thy brow to find, And bathe it with perfume showers. I bade it whisper in thine ear, As it kissed thy darling cheek, The words I knew you would love to hear. If I were but there to speak.

Darling! I knelt in my lonely room. When my soul was heavy with pain, As it felt that saddest of earthly doom, To love and know it is vain.

And I knew how broken and crushed heart, Where the foot of fate had trod, While you and I were so far apart,

And I told my love to God. T. J.D. HARPER'S MAGAZINE.
