EUROPEAN AFFAIRS. THE PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Penalties of Royalty. The London correspondent of the New York Times writes as follows: Heat and hard work have once more prostrated not only Mr. Gladstone, but that most popular, because simple, kind-hearted and beautiful of Princesses, the Princess of Wales, beautiful of Princesses, the Princess of Wales, and her physicians have sent her off to some "bad" place in the Black Forest of Germany. What she has diad to go through in public is quite sufficient to account for her exhausted condition. She has visited town after town in the north, from Manchester to Hull, surrounded by immense crowds of people more or less enthusiastic, loyal and tipsy—by great populations, that it must pain the heart of any human person to look at who in some cases surged round her as frightfully as did the London mob at her first entry into the metropolis, and trampled each who in some cases who is the first frightfully as did the London mob at her first entry into the metropolis, and trampled each other underfoot with fatal results, as on the night of her marriage when twenty-seven persons were crushed in the crowded London streets—mostly women and children. What a life for 'the pale and lovely lady, when you think of it! The last feather was the part she took in the annual Dramatic Festival at the Crystal Palace. This moneygetting fet was this year retormed—not too soon. The humors of a country fair had grown too blackguard. The more reputable actresses had declined any longer to exhibit themselves off the stage, chaffing for two days with all the roughs and riff-raif of London. So they got up a scrappy dramatic days with all the roughs and riff-raif of London. So they got up a scrappy dramatic performance, which not one in ten could hear, and announced that any lady and gentleman who would make up a purse of two guineas should be presented in the presence of thirty thousand people to the Prince and Princess of Wales. Anybody, we are told, can walk into the White House at Washington, call for refreshments, and shake hands with the President. white House at Washington, can be resident— ments, and shake hands with the President— free gratis. England, being a nation of shop-keepers, a presentation to Royalty costs two guineas. So, in a long procession, the com-mercial couples marched up and mounted the mercial couples marched up and mounted and dais. Some stumbled, some stood and stared their money's worth, some hastily handed the cash to the lovely Princess and precipitately fied. All stood straining their eyes to have the best and longest possible look at the future sovereigns. It was very kind and gracious of their Royal Highnesses, no and gracious of their Royal Highnesses, no doubt—but who, I wonder, suggested the idea of finding in H. R. H. the Princess of Wales a substitute for the touting ballet girls of past seasons, who sold us their photographs, and whatever else we wanted, for the benefit of the Dramatic College of decayed actors.

A communication from Rome, in the Kreutz A communication from Rome, in the Kreutz Zeitung, of Berlin, gives some curious information relative to the projects of the persons organizing the Council. All the articles of the Syllabus are to be transformed into canons, the religious orders are to be abolished, excepting five—the Jesuits, Dominicians, or preaching inonks, Franciscans, Benedictines and Lazarists, or missionaries. The regula clergy are to be diminished, because they represent the democratic or republican element in the Church. The Council is also to increase the power of the bishops, and, by abolishing the immovability of the cures place them in a state of absolute dependence.

CRIME.

Terrible Murder in Missouri.

The St. Louis Republican of the 6th says:
"On Wednesday afternoon William Schubkegal, a resident of Mascoutah, a barber by profession, was murdered in cold blood by a man whose name is given as Henry Gate of Gade. It appears that the murdered man, the murderer and several other parties just prior to the committal of the murder, were assembled in one of the beer saloons of the place, and were laughing and joking with each other. The deceased is described as having been a man of very even temper and fond of a joke, and that he and the murderer had been indulgmurderer and several other parties, just prior to and that he and the marderer had been indulging in jokes at each other's expense. The murderer, who it is said has been following the business of butcher, immediately left the saloon, and proceeded to the shop, where he had been to work, which is two or three squares distant, and there armed himself with a large butcher knife, and returning to the saloon, found Schubkegal sitting by a table drinking a glass of wine, when he remarked to the latter that he intended to kill him, and immediately drew the knife, made a cut in the left side, and, drawing the knife across the abdomen, the man's intestines rushed out, when he fell forward to the floor and immediately expired. After the commission of this horrible crime the murderer walked up to the bar counter, and the floor and immediately expired. After the commission of this horrible crime the murderer walked up to the bar counter, and striking the knife hard on the top of the counter, it is said the knife blade broke in two or three places. The murderer then coolly and deliberately walked out of the back door of the salcon with the view of effecting an escape, but the Town Marshal, aided by some of the clizens, arrested him before he had gone far. Rumor says that upon his being arrested he expressed a regret that he was without weapons, for that if he had them he would also kill the parties who effected his arrest. The culprit was incarcerated in the town jail or calaboose, where he attempted to take his own life by cutting his throat with his penknife, which he had in his possession. In this, however, he was folled, and only succeeded in making a slight wound in the neck, which was dressed by one of the surgeons of the place. Late in the evening the murderer was conveyed to Bellville under a strong guard, and placed in the county jail for safe keeping. The news of this horrible affair created intense excitement in Mascoutali, and at one time it was thought the murderer would be hanged on the spot.

Two or three men entered the bank, got into line, and commenced pushing. The gentleman who lost the money remoustrated with the million to no purpose. When he handed the bank-book to the teller, it was discovered that all the money had been abstracted from it. The men who had been pushing were not to be seen, and they were undoubtedly the
