SAVE THE WATER-Philadelphia was never so near a water famine as it is to-day. The dry weather continues to diminish the supply in the Schuylkill, and the strictest economy in the Schuylkill, and the strictest economy needed in the use of what water can be had. If such economy is used, we shall probably get through without positive stoppage; and all-waste should be absolutely prohibited and prevented. The bath-tubs of Philadelpeia convented. vented. The bath-tubs of Philadelpeia consume an enormous quantity of water. A bucket of water and a sponge furnish an ample substitute and effect a great saving. Washing pavements and sprinkling streets are wholly unnecessary, and should not be permitted. Cutting off these sources of waste, we believe that the rain will come to the rescue before we drain the Schuylkill dry.

The expedient of pumping water into the basins from the sceam fire-engines has been renteans of the steam fire-engines has been re-commended, but has not yet been tried, be-cause it is believed that the hose will not stand the pressure. But it would be more satisfactory to the public if this theory were put to a practical test. If the hose will sustain the pressure a sufficient supply of water can be obtained by this means, and, therefore, the experment ought to be tried at once.

Meantime, save all that can be saved. Saturday is a terrible day for wasting water in Philadelphia. We hope some restraint will be put upon the usual practices of improvident usual to make the meant of the same practices.
