MATTERS IN GENERAL. Wagner.

A new specimen of the numerous eccentricities of Richard Wagner, the inventor of the "music of the future," is given in a book lately published by Herr Mendes, under the title of "Wagner at Home." There is a room in Wagner's house, says the author, with a gorgeously decorated ceiling and tathe walls are portraits Schiller and Beethoven. Goethe, Schiller and Beethoven. The two poets are placed facing each other, but opposite Beethoven there is nothing but a looking-class. On turning to Wagner for an explanation, the musician placed himself in front of the glass, in which his face was reflected, thus supplying the deficiency.

the authority of a letter from Naples, that early in the morning of the 7th of February in that year, twenty-four nuns of the Monastery of the Holy Ghost, after beating the porter and forcing the keys from him, marched out with a crucifix carried before them, and proceeded directly to the palace to complain, to the king that they were almost starved for the want of victuals. The officer on duty admitted them into the court-yard, and, taking their memorial, carried it to the Prince de San. Necandro, who, upon reading it, ordered the nuns to be reconducted with a proper guard to their convent, and reprimanded their superior. The young king, waking soon after, and being informed of what had happened, was so much chagrined that the had missed seeing the young ladies that he ordered his guards to be put under arrest for not informing him.

The Buonaparte Marriages.

The Gaulois publishes, apropos of the recent marriage of Prince Pierre Buonaparte with the daughter of a brass-founder, a curious letter from Prince Lucien Buonaparte, his father, on being directed by Napoleon I, to divorce his wife. The letter is addressed to Mdme, Letitia Buonaparte, and is dated 2th of May, 1810. Lucien says that he married of May, 1810. Lucien says that he married "because he had a right to do so, and before he to whose elevation he chiefly contributed became Emperor." "It is ridiculous and improper," he proceeds, "for a statesman, a minister, and an ambassador to be treated like a street-boy; both my second and my first wife have deserved by their virtues not to have their misfortunes cast in their teeth.
