During last spring and summer a large num-ber of Philadelphia merchants and brokers were victimized by an ingenious forger of city warrants, which suddenly made their appear-ance in the market from some unknown ance in the market from some unknown source. The warrants were exact fac similes of the genuine warrants, being printed in particular imitation of the genuine documents, and the filling in was done in a very skilful and businesslike manner. Soingenious was the fraud and so well executed were the forgeries that before the nature of the paper could be ascertained between $18,000 and $20,000 of the fraudulent issue was in circulation. The warascertained between $18,000 and $20,000 of the fraudulent issue was in circulation. The warrants were all drawn on the bounty fund of Philadelphia, and the forgeries were for sums ranging from $50 to $100 each. No trace of the successful forgers could be obtained, and the Philadelphia authorities became pour and the forged warrants came pour and the Philadelphia authorities became alarmed as the forged warrants came pouring in to the Treasurer of the city. During the month of July last a young man named—Gussen, who had been spending some months at Cape May, stopping at one of the fashionable hotels, and apparently with unlimited means, was drowned while bathing. The remains of the unfortunate young manwere soon after washed ashore, and the coroner took charge of them, as well as the effects The remains of the unfortunate young manwere soon after washed ashore, and the coroner took charge of them, as well as the effects of deceased. On his trunk being opened thefirst clue to the Philadelphia forgeries was obtained, for there were found several of the blank warrants ready for filling up and signing.
The coroner telegraphed to the Philadelphia authorities, and several of the victimized Philadelphians went to Cape May and at once identified the deceased as the man from whom they had purchased the forged warrants. The body of Gussen was taken to Philadelphia and buried by his friends. In the trunk of the deceased forger was found a photograph of a young man who was known as Martin Gray, a companion of deceased. On seeing this photograph, it was recognized as that of the person from whom a number of the forged warrants had been purchased. As Gray hailed from this city, Chief Kelso, of the detective force, was notified, and the photograph was sent on to that official.

that Gray had left the city, and was "sporting" about at the watering places, and was heard of at Saratoge and other places of public resort. A few days ago he returned to this city, and yesterday afternoon was arrested by Messrs. Farley and Eustace, in Broadway, near Fourteenth street. He was taken to the Central Office and locked up. Chief Kelso at once telegraphed to the authorities of the Quaker City, who replied by telegraph, requesting the Chief to hold on to the accused, and stating that an officer would be despatched at once with a requisition from Governor Geary for his rendition. Gray is a young man of good education and excellent address. He dresses in the most fashionable style, and is one of the genus ("sport "so prevalent in New York. Gray is merely an alias, his proper name being Martin Lindenborn, although he was a clerk in the office of Henry L. Clinton several years ago, and was at that time a promising and rising young man. He is locked up at Police Headquarters to await the action of the Philadelphia authorities.

MATTERS IN GENERAL

Victor Hugo's Blunders.

Victor Hugo declines to be excused for his historical and geographical blunders on the lenient reasoning that the errors of genius must not be scrutinized with Aristarchean eves. He clings to them, on the contrary, and defends them, in spite of exposure, ridicule and remonstrance. Beethoven, being convicted of "consecutive fifths"—a violation of musical grammar—said they must be correct, since he had used them. In like manner, Hugo persists that "Première des quatre" is the proper translation of "Firth of Forth," and justifies it by maintaining that the English, or Scotch, title literally signifies or onght to signify the "First of Four Cliffs." At any rate, "Première des quatre" is the expression he has chosen, it satisfies him perfectly, and he refuses to change it on any terms. With equal fidelity he adheres to his ludicrous mistakes in the opening chapters of "L'Homine qui Rit," wherein the list of half the British nobility is thrown into a state of confusion sufficient to be wilder Burke himself. All these errors were pointed out to the author before the publication of his work but on Victor Hugo's Blunders. were pointed out to the author before the publication of his work, but, as it appears, without convincing him that his imagination was not better than any other people's facts. What We May Expect.

Under the head of "By 1900 A. D.-What?" a writer in the current number, of Appletons Journal undertakes to forecaste the future social and industrial condition of the United cial and industrial condition of the United States. He predicts (1) that there will be no great war during the next thirty years; (2) that there will be an enormous increase of the wealth of the country; (3) that this wealth will be far more unequally distributed than it is now—that the rich will become very much richer, while the numbers of the wage-receiving class will be largely added to. In other words, instead of a population mainly composed of the middle-class, as is the case now, we shall have a very the class and a overt labority. middle-class, as is the case now, we shall have a very rich class and a great laboring though not a poor class; in short, that the middle-class, so-called, will be greatly reduced in number as compared with the rest of the population. Assuming this state of affairs to exist, the writer inclines to believe that the close of the century will witness great industrial. the writer inclines to believe that the close of the century will witness great industrial dis-turbances, unless the very rich recognize their social duties towards the rest of the commu-nity; in other words, that their wealth, shall not be used for selfish purposes, but for the public weal. These speculations as to the future would be interesting and profitable if there were any means of verifying them, and there were any means of verifying them; and, if it is true that the movements of society are subject to laws as invariable as those which control the planets, why, of course the time must come when that prime test of all science—prediction—will be true of them.

Something about Noses.

From an article upon Georgia by M. de Villeneuve, the last explorer of that district, it appears that the much vaunted beauty of the Georgian women is almost wholly confined to the inhabitants of the province of Imerethia and Mingrelia. As for the men, they are distinguished by another advantage—the prominence of their noses. M. de Villeneuve sneaks of those noses. neuve speaks of those noses in terms of the greatest enthusiasm:

"Were you adorned with the finest nose "Were you adorned with the finest nose which Europe ever produced—a nose by the side of which that of Alcide, Tonsey, or Schiller would look insignificant—you would be the object of remark in the street of Tiflis. On your arrival at the very frontler of the country you cannot escape from the conviction that at the sight of these Georgian noses, all noses, whether Greek, Roman, Spanish, or even Neapolitan and Tyrolese, should hide themselves with shame. The Georgian noses are of every shape and of every color, but the red and the purple predominate. You have but to press them between your fingers, and from the smallest would flow a pint of the wine of Kalketia."

It costs something, however, to color these noses. M. de Villeneuve asserts that the Georgians generally consume from six to seven litres of wine at each meal—and that fifteen-litre men are by no means rare.

Two Heroes.

Before the recent rebellion, Col. Wduring a short sojourn in Vicksburg, met there some hot blooded Southerners, with there some hot-blooded Southerners, with a spirit as fiery as his own. They quarreled—a challenge was passed and accepted, and the next rising sun was to witness one, if not both, of their dead bodies, drenched in blood, to wash out wounded honor. During the night, the colonel said he heard a boat coming up the river, and it struck him, as he heard the boat miffing and blowing, that "prudence was the putting and blowing, that "prudence was the better part of valor." So he took his trunk upon his shoulder, and stepped, in the dead of the night, very quietly out of the hotel. As he neared the boat, whom should he see but his antagonist. his antagonist, at the boat before him, just going on board! He returned as he had gone going on board! He returned as he had gone out, and was on the ground next morning, with his second, waiting; with disappointed wrath, for his antagonist, and published him as an abscording scoundrel.

New Devices for the Stage.

The London Orchestra says: "The ballet-master of the Rouen theatre is The London Orclestra says:

"The ballet-master of the Rouen theatre is training a snake to take part in the choregraphic displays which he directs. The interesting young female, however, whose name is Jema, has formed an alliance which for the moment has had the effect of interrupting her studies in art. She has been laying a store of eggs, from which it is hoped that a fine school of dancers may be reared. What a prospect. Serpents and girls intermingling on the stage as in the garden of Eden! Nor is Rouen alone in its ambition to show what wonders can be done with the ballet. At the Gaieté in Paris they are going to bring out a magnificent ballet with two hundred and sixty-two performers, changing their costume in the course of the performance about seven times. But whereas the ballet-master at Rouen has set his heart on serpents, the artist of the Gaieté is all intent on devils. In his grand ballet the dancers are to be in the guise of devils. This ballet is one of three which are to give life to a splendid spectacular piece called The White Cat. In another ballet belonging to the same piece we are told that the Emerald of the demi-monde will wear a dress which is to cost a 250, independent of the valuable jewels which she herself may add to it from easkets of her own; and that the whole tableau in which she is to appear will involve an expenditure of three thousand guineas." diture of three thousand guineas."

Destructive Fire in the Fifteenth Ward entemi konst gardule (1

An Extensive Planing Mill Burned and Ten Other Buildings Badly Damaged.

THE LOSS ABOUT $50,000

This morning, about three o'clock, the Excelsior Wood-working Mill, Messrs Doerr, Soir & Co.; Proprietors, Nos. 1496, 11408 and 1410 Coates street, was discovered to be on fire. When first seen by a butcher at the market on the east side of Broad street, above, Coates, the flames were in the yard, in a space between the office and the mill, and it is not positively known whether they came from the mill or were among rubbish and lumber in the mill or were among rubbish and lumber in the yard.

The property covers a lot 50 feet front on Coates street, and extending 110 feet in depth. There is an alley in the rear, At No. 1406 Coates street was a three-storied brick structure, used as an office. West of the office, Nos. 1408 and 1410, was an open space or yard where lumber was stored. In the rear of this, and also covering a space in the rear of the office, was the main mill, a three-storied brick structure. 44 by 60 feet, filled with all the structure, 44 by 60 feet, filled with all the machinery necessary to such an establishment

At the time of the occurrence of the fire At the time of the occurrence of the fire, the gate on Coates street was securely fastened, and some time clapsed before it could be forced open. In the meantime, the fiames spread rapidly through the inflammable material which was inside and outside of the mill. In a very short period, and before the firement could get fairly to work, the entire establishment was one vast sheet of fire.

The flames burned fiercely, and shot up high into the air, creating a light which illuminated that section of the city for several squares distant. A pretty strong breeze from squares distant. A pretty strong breeze from the southwest was blowing at the time, and large pieces of cinders were carried several squares in a northeasterly direction, to the great danger of housetops.

The planing-mill and all the fixtures, machinery, stock, material, &c., were totally destroyed. There was not much finished stock on hand, but there was a considerable the lot of lumber on or about the premises.

The loss of Messrs Doerr, Sen & Co., on buildings, stock, machinery, &c., is estimated at $40,000. Upon this there was an insurance of $8,500—$4,000 in the Royal, and the balance in Connecticut, New York and Baltimore companies. companies.

A MAN SHOT AND INSTANTLY KILLED

THE MURDERER ARRESTED

Richard D. Carter, a boss mason, in the employ of the Water Department, was shot and instantly killed while engaged at work at Fairmount, about half-past nine o'clock this morning. Carter had been measuring a stone near the bridge crossing the forebay. Ha near the orage crossing the loraday. He arosek, to his feet, surveyed his work for a moment; and then remarked to a man who had been assisting him—"I guess that will do." At this instant the shot was fired. The ball entered the left hreast of Carter about an inch and a half below the heart, and passed disconsily through the bady and carrie out as liagonally through the body and can the back. Carter fell over and expired with-the back. Carter fell over and expired without uttering a word.

The shot, of course attracted the attention of the workmen and others who were in the immediate neighborhood, and all rushed to the spot. The body of the murdered man was then conveyed to the headquarters of the Park Guard, at the Rialto House, and the Corner was sent for to hold an inquest. Park Guard, and the Bialto House, and the Coroner was sent for to hold an inquest.
Capt. John Lyons, of the Park Guard, was sitting at his headquarters at the time of the occurrence. He heard the shot, and immediately ran over to the place from which it came. He observed a large, heavily-built man walking along one of the paths with a large-sized Coles havy revolver in his hand, and a member of the Park Guard quietly looking at the man. He asked the Guard about the mat. member of the Park Guard quietly looking at the man. He asked the Guard about the mat-ter, and the reply was: "Do you think I am going to arrest that man while he has that revolver in his hand." Lyons immediately went after the mufderer, and, upon coming up to him, recognized him. He said: "Joe what does this mean?" The reply was: "You are not going to take me in the Park; I am going home." At the same time a movement, was not going to take me in the Park; I am going home." At the same time a movement was made as if he intended to fire upon the officer. Lyons, by a quick movement, knocked the man down by a blow with his right hand, and seized the hand of the man which held the revolver. A struggle ensued and the murderer succeeded in drawing the revolver through the hands of Lyons; severely lacerating the flesh. By this time Lieutenant Simon Jacoby, of the Schuylkill Harbor Police, had reached the scene, and then the murderer was secured, the scene, and then the murderer was secured, and was taken to the Central Station in charge of Officer Jesse G. Phy, of the Park Guard.

Mr. Carter, the murdered man, resided at About two weeks ago he was attacked in the street, in the evening, knocked down and severely beaten. At the time one of his assailants remarked, "You have not seen the last of this."

The alleged murderer is named Joseph Snyder. He was formerly in the employ of the Water Department, and worked under Carter. He was discharged, along with other workmen, some time last winter. This morning he was about Fairmount looking for Carter for some time before the shooting oc-

The motive for the commission of the act is believed to be an old grudge in connection with some family affairs. The affair, of course, created the most intense excitement about Fairmount and its vicinity.
