minutes since. I reached the city. I heard a meeting was to take place preparatory to the reception of the remains, and for the purpose of prescribing the programme for his funeral. I have come here unexpectedly and wholly unprepared to pronounce an eulogy upon the distinguished individual. I shall not undertake any such labor, but I will say, at least, it affords me great pleasure, if that term should be used in connection with the departed, to mingle my sympathies with his relations and friends. This audience know that the distinguished individual and myself differed in politics, but while we opposed each other in our tics, but while we opposed each other in our views, we often met as friends. We have met upon the rostrum and the stump, and in the councils of the nation, and participated in discussion. I always found him to be a man of deded talent, a patriot and lover of his country While we differed upon many questions; and in the main, when we had two parties, which are known by their party names, it affords me great pleasure to say that in the leading issues growing out of our recent troubles we agreed.

It also affords me pleasure to be here to-day to be a feet the say that in the leading issues. to bear testimony to his worth, patriotism and statesmanship. Let the past be what it might, it has been nothing unpleasant. I knew Mr. Bell personally and politically and it is a great pleasure to me to bear testimony to his patrotism and do honor to his memory."
