"The far-famed Chickamauga Creek is a si tent and singuish stream creeping along as if indifferent to time or distance. A ferry-boat was upon the other side, but the long-contimed dry weather had taken its occupation away, as pedestrians could easily step from rock to rock and cross dry shod. At the crossing there was an imposing looking mill, but the saw crept through the timber at so sluggish a rate that one would have instinctively guessed the nature of the stream that ed it, even had he been a stranger to its name. It was an 'accommodation mill,' for the sawyer stopped it in order that its noise might not prevent him from giving me information concerning the country.

"From this point to the Lafayette road, where wished to strike it just above the battle-field, it is seven miles. A more barren, desolate, poverty-stricken seven miles of ground I never traveled over before. The whole of it had been little less than a camp-ground and a battle-field. Four miles from the mill I came to the place where General Jeff. C. Davis's division had made their winter quarters during the winter of 1863-64. Two thousand acres had been stripped of timber, and in its place had grown ilderness of briers and bushes, relieved by nothing but occasionally a couple of chimneys. showing that the torch of war had been at work. At the far side of this melancholy waste I saw a small log house, in front of which was sitting a young girl, with too blue an eye and fair a face for so desolate a region.

and fair a face for so desolate a region.

""" The people are mighty poor about here,' said a lady, as she handed me a drink of water; the war stripped us of everything, and it seems like we'll never get over it. Before the war the soil would produce tolerably well, but it same like it's all weeked every or some but it seems like it's all washed away or something has happened to it that it won't grow much of anything. We have not had a good crop since the surrender, and this year it's worse than ever. Everything is burned up, and unless we have rain pretty quick, I'm afraid the water will give out."

"Pressing on through this woe-begone country, through forests that were shedding their dry dead leaves, through corn-fields that will not yield a bushel to the acre, over gravelly barren ridges, and occasionally by a dilapidated habitation, I reached at last the Lafayette and Chattanooga road. at a point a mile and a half north of the battle-field of Chickamauga.

"Inquiring for the centre of the field, in which to begin observations, I was told that Mr. W. G. Snodgrass lived at a point that was generally considered the centre of the battle-field. Three quarters of a will are the battle line crossed the road, turned westwardly into the woods towards Mr. Snodgrass's house.

"Here the timber gave evidence of the fearful struggle, which it had witnessed. Here was a tree out of which some curiosity-seeker had dug a bullet; there was a large oak, shattered by ball and shell; yonder was a hickory, literally cut in two by the terrible missiles of wai; and on every side were the marks of minnie balls and grape shot."

A New Autograph of Shakespeare. Mr. Jos. Burtt sends to the London Times an account of a (supposed) new autograph of Shakespeare, which he found at Bury St. Ed-

He says: I wish to rescue from oblivion what I fully believe to be a genuine autograph of William Shakespeare, and one of the most interesting character. The discussion of a subject of such world-wide interest may be well suited to your columns, especially when so many who must feel a deep interest in the subject are scattered over the earth.

On my arrival at Bury St. Edmunds in the middle of last month for the purpose of offi-ciating as honorable secretary of the Royal Archeological Institute at the annual meeting about to be held, I had put into my hands a little book, the property of a clergyman in the immediate neighborhood. It is an Amsterdam edition of the works of Ovid (in royal 32mo), beautifully printed in 1630. The second leaf from the beginning is cut down all round. from the beginning is cut down all round, covered with parchment on one side, and on it are pasted the signatures of "Hugh Middleton" and "John Dryden." Turning on a few pages more another leaf is found similarly treated, and on it pasted a piece of paper, the entire size of the parchment, on which are the words, "thyne Sweeteste, W. Shakspere, Strattforde Marche 16," in the handwriting of the latter part-of the sixteenth century. This was protected with silver paper pasted in. The writing was faint, and not easy to read: but it had to was faint, and not easy to read; but it had to me a very genuine look, though smaller and neater in character than what I could recollect of that of our great dramatist. The paper also looked quite of the same date. The his tory of the book is this. About 28 years ago an elder brother of the present owner (the Rev. Herbert Hawkins, rector of Beyton) bought it of a second-hand bookseller for the sake of Dryden's autograph. Turning over the pages, he came to the autograph of Shakespeare. This he showed to some friends, who "pool-pooled" it, and so it was consigned to retirement. The present owner became the possessor of the volume after his brother's death about two years ago. He had always been impressed with a belief in the genuineness of Shakespeare's signature, but did nothing with it till he heard of the Museum which the Archaeological Institute was forming at Bury, which he though a good opportunity for pringing it forward.

Considering carefully all the circumstances, struck with the entire bona fide history of the little volume, the thorough genuine look of the 1 two other autographs it contained, and the general appearance of that of Shakespeare, I felt convinced that we had here an additional example of our great poet's very scarce handwriting, and it was exhibited at the Bury Museum of the institute as such.

Of the six accredited signatures of Shakespeare, five are attached to business documents. That in the Florio is by far the earliest, and it is the only one that may be considered the writing of the poet in his familiar manner. Not a single letter of Shakespeare's is known to exist. In Mr. Hawkins's autograph we have obviously the ending of a letter to some one addressed in the most tender and loving terms.

Certainly, Send us Some.

How Coolies work in Louisiana is thus told by Dr. Dennett, editor of the Planter's Banner, who is well known to mahy Gin civizens of Western Texas, and who is the earnest advocate of every measure that promises to add to the development of the agricultural and planting resources of his adopted State. In 1867 the Doctor visited Dr. Kitridge's plantation, where there were twenty-three Chinese laborers at work in the field. They had just come from China. Lieutenant Kelly, then and now manager on the plantation, gave all the information he then had in regard to these laborers, and the Doctor published a statement of these facts, which seemed to promise well for Chinese labor. A few days since the Doctor met Lieutenant Kelly, and asked him what became of those Chinese, and how he liked them? He said that at first they did pretty well, but they soon become trifling. He could neither coax nor drive them into the field when they chose to remain in their cabins. They preferred making bead-work, toys and trinkets, to field labor. In making these they were expert and ingenious. They sold them at Napoleonville for more than their plantation wages amounted 10, and docking their wages, and witholding rations, had no effect on them. They all carried sheath knives like sailors. One day Lieut. Kelly was badly aggravated, by one of them, and struck him with a hoop pole. Eight of the Chinese drew their knives and made at him. He backed and fell over a cart tongue backward; they would have killed him but for a negro who fired among them with a six-shooter. Lieut. Kelly then went to Napoleonville, and obtained the services of an officer and some men, and they drove them off the place. In searching their cabins they found axes, saws, hammers, and all sorts of carpenters' and coopers' tools hidden away tools that had been missed from the plantation, but never till then knew whom the thieves were. They are treacherous, stubborn, and lazy, and he would rather have one negro on a place than five. Chinese laborers, and doubts if they did not rank low among the Coolie labor of Cuba. But he says he never wants another Chinese laborer on a place that he manages.

CITY BULLETIN.

KICKED DOWN STARS—Complaint was made to Lieutenant Pritchard, of the Eleventh District Police, last evening that there was much interference with the Assessors of the Nineteenth Ward, who were sitting at the harve of Libb Months on Frankford road. house of John Martin, on Frankford road, above Norris street. He detailed Policeman above Norris street. He detailed Policeman Jatrick Levy to preserve order there. As Levy was going up stairs, a man, was kicked in the mouth at the landing, and fell over backwards. He was caught by the officer, or he would probably have broken his neck. James Crawford, who is alleged to have kicked the man, was arrested and was held in $400.

James Crawford, who is alleged to have kicked the man, was arrested and was held in $400 bail by Ald. Heins.

Crawford was subsequently arrested upon the charge of having assaulted a German at the same house. Upon this charge he was held in $800 bail by Ald. Heins.

MURDEROUS ASSAULT.—James Crawford and William Crawford were before Alderman and William Crawford were before Alderman Heins this morning upon the charge of assault and battery upon James Horner, with intent to kill. It is alleged that Horner was passing the house of Thomas Crawford, on Frankford road, above Norris street, last evening, and was dragged in. There he was violently assaulted. He received a severe cut over the eye, a punctured wound through the cheek, and a dangerous injury on the head. He was not able to appear at the hearing this morning. The defendants were therefore held in $1,500 bail for a further hearing.

RIOTING.—Last evening a number of roughs from the Twentieth Ward went to the house at Fourth and George streets, where the Six-teenth Ward assessments had been made, and raised a disturbance. Seven of the rioters were arrested by the Tenth District police. One of them, George Stoneman, had a pistol on his person. When the case was heard by Alderman Riddell, Stoneman was held in $1,500 bail for carrying concealed deadly weapons, and the others were held to bail for

THIS HOT WEATHER -- We need not try to persuade ourselves that summer is not over tor it is, despite these few days of August-like weather. And we should prepare ourselves for a sudden change and a "cold snap" at any moment. We should look to our clothing and make our arrangements for our Fall and Winter wear. And the first and best step toward that end would be to attend the "Extoward that end would be to attend the 12x hibition" at Oak Hall, on Thursday of this week, when, with new styles and beautiful fabrics, and all the other attractions of their new stock, Wanamaker & Brown will doubtless give the public quite a treat.
