Those who take the less cheerful view of the present situation are of opinion that the regular fall activity in money has set in, as shown by the increasing demand from the West, sithough the inquiry from that region so far has been only for the smaller demonitations of currency, as if to meet a local want in that specialty of money. The peculiarity of this demand is accounted for by the theory that the banks in the Western cities have sent all their smaller durrency into the interior to pay the laborers and farm hands who are now becoming entitled to their quarter's wages. As the crops are only just beginning to move, the demand for the great bulk of money has not yet been felt.
