it was asserted that weighty considerations were placed before them by persons who, it was surmised have much to gain by planting the municipal buildings on the Penn Squares. Whether the question was considered and decided purely on its merits is not known. But it is known that its petition to the Legislature cost neither the Board of Trustees nor any individual anything more than a very small sum for paper and ink and postage.

The legislators at Harrisburg did not favor the project, which they would readily have done had their character been as the Sunday Dispatch suggests, and had the members of the Academy bribed them sufficiently. Yet, in my very humble judgment, they could not have appropriated the Penn Squares more profitably to the citizens of Phlladelphia than by allotting them freely to the Academy and other institutions to which the editor of the Sunday Dispatch applies opprobrious epithets without any apparent reason or provocation. He does not approve of this view; but he cannot refrain from calling people names who honestly differ with him on this point, possibly because it may be his habitual or favorite mode of argument. This is, however, purely a matter of taste, and not to be criticised. No one is officially authorized to announce that the Board of Trustees has determined to Corset Warehouse REMOVED commence a new building for the Academy. It is probably known that a committee has been at work, in conjunction with the archi-tect, in carefully maturing a plan of building, and that this committee is now prepared t submit the result of its labors to the Board for adoption, modification or rejection, as it may find expedient. It may be safely assumed, however, that if a hundred thousand dollars could be added at once to the fund, a new building would be commenced just as soon as plans and specifications are ready to be given out to contractors for the work. But while it
