The subject very soon turned to the boundary of snow upon the imalayas; a subject which had earlier greatly interested him, and with which he wasengaged for years. He was one of the first to adopt the discovery of Webb and Moorcroft about the Ayer's Cathartic Pills year 1812—that the snow boundary on the northern slope of the Himalayas was higher than on the southern slope; and he was one of the foremost in endeavoring to find an explanation phenomenon. This view was, by no means acknowledge as correct, but found many opponents that Humboldt became entangled series of the most unpleasant scien ific controversies. It gave us, therefore, much pleasure to be able to communicate to him how brilliantly the correctness of his views were preserved. 'You are mistaken, my friend,' h replied, with a painful smile. The general appearance of his letters are often
