This an accordance with previous orders are according to the circular of General Caballero de Rodas, no one can be arrested on mere suspicion, and in case of there being sufficient cause the arrest shall be made after due verbal process by placing the presumptive offenders at the disposal of the Captain-General—that is, in cases of political oflences.

Several of us were put upon trial some days since on the suppositon that we were guilty of the crime of high treason, and due proceedings since on the supposition that they ought to be quashed, with which the Associate Judge, who in Spanish courts is the responsible one, agreed; thereupon, the Governor-General of this, Department, although complying with the letter of this decision, demanded bail of the accused, thereby showing an inconsistency which can be justified neither by the keenest reason nor by any sophistry or subtlety or interpretation.
