EVENING BULLETIN.

Friday, October 23, 1869. CHANT AND THE LATE ELECTION. Republican victory in Pennsylvania, people have not generally given as much credit as was due to the Republican administration at Washington, and to its great chief, General Grant. | creditable to them as lawyers. no our local politics there have been all sorts of quarrels, jealousies, cliques, calumnies, treach- mands plain speaking. When a corrupt clique eries and meannesses, that have operated can organize murder against a faithful efficer To the disadvantage of Governor Geary in the of the government, and then tamper with witass. The respect and confidence that the people have in the Grant administration rests on the most substantial foundations. He knows nothing of the arts that politicians and demagogues employ to win popular favor. He does not flatter, he does not make speeches, he does net write letters, to win the applause of orators or editors. He does not select his Cabinet officers or other important functionaries from the politicians and speech-makers who so often pretend to be the creators or the moulders of public sentiment. He conducts his administration, in all its details, with a view to honesty and fidelity; and while, in doing this, he must offend the scheming and selfish, the people at large see that all is going well; that his heads of departments are able, vigilant and trustworthy; that reconstruction at the South is going on satisfactorily; that prosperity is increasing in all parts of the country; that the revenues of the government are honestly collected; that the Treasury is constantly overflowing with money, and that the surplus is judiciously and wisely employed in the payment of the national debt. These are facts which the great public, outside of the narrow circle of the politicians, can perfectly well understand, and in Pennsylvania the people would have been very foolish if they had elected as their Governor a man who, so far as he has any opinions of his own on public questions, is known to be hostile to President Grant and his whole policy. A few days before the election Secretary Boutwell made a speech to the Republicans of Philadelphia, in which he laid particular stress mpen the financial policy of President Grantthe policy of retrenchment and reduction of the public debt. This was throwing down the gauntlet anew to the repudiators, and to the Whisky Ring, and to all the thieving adventurers that thrived under Andrew Johnson, but, having been turned out by Grant, have been hoping for a popular reaction against him. Under the immediate impression of this speech in spite of circumstances which many of the Republican party thought would have been fatal to any Republican candidate. In addition, to the feeling concerning the finances, the people of Pennsylvania had a strong desire to show their approval of the amendments to the National Constitution, the President Grant. The Packer Democracy had solemnly pronounced their condemnation of carried the Governor and the Legislature, they intended to try to embarass the national administration by repealing the resolution adopting it. President Grant's anxiety for the success of the Fifteenth Amendment is well known, and the people of Pennsylvania, in voting for Geary and the Republican ticket, knew they the Fifteenth Amendment, and if they had

The long continuance of the war against Paraguay has astonished every one. When Brazil, Uruguay and the Argentine Confederation made their alliance against Lopez, it was thought they would finish him in a few months. But Lopez was stronger than he was supposed to be. He also proved superior to the generals of the allies in strategy. He had the advantage of being able to choose his positions of resistance, while his enemies labored amidst all the difficulties that always surround an invading army. The resources of Paraguay have also proved much greater than any one supposed them to be, and contrary to the general belief outside of the country, the people have shown enthusiastic devotion to him. Thus it is, that the war has lasted four years. Uruguay and the Argentina Confederation
