FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE

LETTER FROM PARIS.

The French Senate and Senate Commission.

(Correspondence of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.)

PARIS, Tuesday, October 12, 1869.—I continue and conclude the above subject without the comparative quiet of political events previous to the meeting of the Chamber permits me to do so, and also because a right understanding of it will be essential to appreciating properly the debates which will no doubt arise immediately respecting it.

The next article of the Senate's Constitution after that which I last considered is the sixth, and is of great importance; as a change, though illustrating strongly how utterly inefficient the previously existing state of things must have been. It only accords to the French Chamber what every other legislative body, even on this continent, already possesses, viz.: The right of electing its own President and officers. To have such a novelty of the Emperor as De Morny and Walowski by treating as a Speaker, to snub and reduce to silence, as was done, every independent expression of opinion, was an indignity which no Legislature pretending to represent and speak for the nation could long submit to. De Morny used regularly to read the Deputies a lesson on the necessity of good behavior at the opening of the session, and praise them for their docility at its close.

Now, an election of the Speaker will be a criterion of the temper of the House, when it first meets; and who holds the office will be more anxious to maintain the dignity and independence of his own colleagues in the Assembly than the prerogatives of the government. An attempt was made to submit the nomination to the approbation of the Emperor, but this proposition was too reactionary even for the Senate.

The seventh article is even more important, perhaps, than the preceding one. It accords two things: first, an unrestricted right for every member to address an interpellation to the government. When the discussion on the Address was abolished, it was replaced, or professed to be replaced, by the right of interpellation. But the latter right was only limited and conditional. To exercise it, it required the signatures of five members, and when these were obtained the question was further referred to the Bureaux, or standing committees, whether the interpellation demanded should be allowed. If four Bureaux out of nine decided negatively, the interpellation was thrown out; and as the government at that time commanded a majority in every Bureau, it had only to intimate its pleasure, whenever it wished an interpellation to be rejected. The pretended right was therefore a mere farce; now, it will be a reality. Secondly, the seventh article allows the Chamber to adopt motions of the day "with the reasons assigned" (motives); whereas it could before only vote the order of the day, without expression of opinion, or pure et simple, as it was called. The only restriction now remaining is that the government can, if it likes, require such orders of the day, when proposed, to be referred to the standing committees, and reported on, before discussion. The object of this latter restriction is, of course, to give the opportunity for delay and obstruction.

Article eight relates to the power of moving amendments, and is very important, because, in fact, emancipates the Corps Legislatif from the control of the Council of State, to which it was previously, in this respect, completely subject. All bills have hitherto emanated only from the government, and were proposed and presented to the Chamber by the Council of State. After they were referred to a commission and reported on, they could then be presented, and amendments were again referred back to the commission. But though the commission might accept them, yet if the Council of State did not, things came to a dead lock; and the only remedy that the Chamber and its commission had was to throw out the entire bill—the disputed amendments and all. Thus, as I said, the representative Chamber was made subservient in legislation to a body nominated wholly by the Emperor. This state of things will now be changed. The Council of State will now be bound to "give its opinion" upon such amendments, and the final decision is left, as it ought always to have been, with the Legislature of the country.

By article ninth the budget will be voted by chapters, divided into separate items, so that any credit, however small, can be rejected by itself. Formerly, if the Chamber discovered a credit, say of only 100,000 francs, to which it objected, in the War Department, for instance, it could only strike it out by rejecting the entire estimates for the army. The object of such restrictions is too transparent to require to be insisted upon.

By article tenth the Emperor relinquishes wholly and on all his absurd prerogative of dabling as he likes with the customs and tariffs of the country, and making what commercial treaties he pleases. The vehement demand made for this concession shows that free trade still rests upon an unstable footing in France, and may be much modified by the Legislature.

The eleventh article only enacts that the "constitutional" relations between the government, the Senate and the Legislative Chamber, as above established, can only be changed by a vote of a new Senate Commission; but that other relations, or matters of mere routine between the different powers of the State, may be regulated by decree. And, finally, article twelve abrogates all preceding enactments which are in contradiction to the above.

I have thus gone through the various provisions of this important transformation of the Imperial Constitution, and shown their extent and probable effect, as well as the nature and functions of the body by which, at the command of the Emperor, they have been put into legal form and operation. Considered even alone, and by themselves, they are, in my opinion, very considerable. But they are of tenfold consequence when we consider the public spirit which has sprung from an unwilling authority, and which betrays that unwillingness in every letter both of the enactments themselves and of the report which accompanies it. The whole apparent object is to yield as little as it is thought can possibly be accepted. And the concessions made have, in fact, been characterized and labeled as wholly insufficient by even moderate members of the liberal party, and by no one more than by Prince Napoleon himself in his late brilliant speech in the Senate. But the only mode to estimate these concessions aright is to discern that they are the way, as they most clearly do, to all or others. The Corps Legislatif can now think, speak and act as it likes, without impediment, and with the full conviction and assurance that the country is behind it, and that the Emperor, if he dissolves the present, will only get a worse Chamber, and that therefore he has no choice left but to submit to any reasonable conditions proposed to him.

CRIME

A DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

A Husband Chooses His Wife to Death—Anonymous Letters the Cause—He Chokes Her from Ear to Ear—A Horrible Scene.

ROSNOUR, N. Y., Oct. 24.—I send you full particulars of a horrible tragedy that was committed near this village last night. The actor in this terrible drama of blood was Joseph Wood, a ship-carpenter by trade, and a man well known to be the slave of his passions. Notwithstanding the fact, however, that he posed that he could be capable of committing the crime of murder. For some months past Wood gave signs of laboring under an aberrated state of mind, and many of his neighbors were of the opinion that he was laboring positively insane. The cause of this change in the man's mental condition it is now well known was twofold.

Wood was twice married, and one of his wives survives him. For some time past he has been constantly receiving letters from an anonymous source. These letters which, it is supposed, were sent by his wife, were intended to create a feeling of hatred in the mind of the man toward the wife with whom he lived in Rosnour, and the outskirts of this village. In one of these letters it was stated that the child which was living with him was not his own. Operating on a mind like his, this state of things would naturally have a brooding over it until it culminated in a crime. For a long time, however, he kept the matter a secret.

A few days since he borrowed some money from Mr. Abram Sibley, of this village, and with it paid some of his debts. This transaction was much talked about in the neighborhood, and his neighbors expressed their belief that he was going mad.

Last evening the horrible culmination was reached. Wood returned home from his work, and about eight o'clock, on entering the house, accused his wife of infidelity and holding in her heart no love for him. A quarrel ensued, and a lady living in another part of the house, who had been attracted by the angry voices, Wood's wife explained, and attempted to make an explanation, but her mad husband would listen to no entreaties. Pursuing her mad course, she seized an axe and swore that she would take his wife's life. The woman who heard this threat became terrified, but was unable for some seconds to move from her place. She then called to Wood, saying, "Jessey, don't you kill her!" and then came some subdued sounds and the fall of somebody on the floor.

Wood then rushed to the door and into the street and cried for help. Her cries were heard by Mr. Levi Metcalf, a resident of the neighborhood, who was passing at the time. He went into the house, and found the woman "My God, my God, I think that Wood has killed his wife." Mr. Metcalf ran into the house, and was met at the door by a mad, who warned him not to enter the room.

Mr. Metcalf looked into the room and witnessed a picture such as has seldom been seen in this country. The body of the woman lay on the floor in a pool of blood. Her head, face and throat revealed eleven terrible gashes, inflicted with the axe in the most barbarous manner. Mr. Metcalf was for a moment paralyzed by the sickening scene. Finally he said to Wood: "Jessey, this is a bad job for you." Wood looked at him for a moment, and then, rushing to a bureau, he seized a razor, and attempted to cut his own throat. Mr. Metcalf took hold of his arm, and a scuffle ensued, which ended with the mad man being driven from the room, and threatened with injury if he dared to return.

Wood, then, with perfect deliberation, killed his wife, by striking her across the throat, making a deep gash with the razor from ear to ear. To-day an inquest was held on the bodies, and the verdict rendered in accordance with the foregoing facts. Wood left a letter, written shortly before the commission of the tragedy, but it is so illegible that only the concluding sentence can be read. This sentence is: "I have killed my wife, and I am proud of it. My wife has been a bad woman for many years. His wife was greatly respected for many virtues, and the terrible manner in which she died has cast a gloom over the whole community. Wood was formerly a hard drinker, but of late had indulged but little in the use of ardent spirits.—N. Y. World.

TRAGEDY AT SEA.

Fresh Horrors of the Coalle Trade—Murder, Murder and Suicide.

The St. Helena Guardian, of the 24th ult., relates a story, perhaps the most horrible that has ever been recorded in connection with traffic in human flesh. The French bark Tamiris, Captain Ramie, left Macao on the 15th of February, with a cargo of three hundred Chinese, a Chinese doctor, and a Chinese interpreter, besides eighteen in crew. According to the account of those of the party who returned, the Tamiris sailed on everything passed on pleasantly until within about 270 miles of the Isle of Java; a revolt broke out among the free emigrants, who seemed to be the best of it, the crew talking to the boats, describing the means of leaving their unfortunate Captain, who either did not wish or was not able to abandon his ship, and they were thus enraged semibarbarians. What happened to the unfortunate Captain we cannot learn for certain; according to the interpreter on board the Tamiris, he was cut up and thrown overboard. Thirty days these savages remained in possession of the ship, which had been captured by a Dutch man-of-war, which had been sent in pursuit. The Dutch found a Chinese in the Captain's quarters, but could not discover the slightest trace of M. Ramie. They placed him and the other leaders of the revolt in irons, and took the ship to Padang. At Padang the remains of the former crew, who had landed in Java, re-joined their ship. A new Captain and chief officers were appointed, and the ship started on her destined voyage on the 15th of June. By this date the number of coolies had been reduced, by arms and disease, to 345. Out of this number scores jumped overboard and were lost to sight. The others found that they were to proceed on their voyage, but that others had died of what a coolie ship captain phlegmatically would call the effects of opium. There now remain on board the Tamiris seventy-five emigrants alive. These are now about the murder and wholesale loss of lives on board this ship, we would almost hail the ship as not intended to profit by the moral lesson of the story of its voyage, they will most probably have to learn by the post-mortem one it teaches them.

Resignation of Judge Brewster

He is Appointed Attorney-General of the State.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 25, 1869.—To His Excellency, John W. Geary, Governor.—SIR: Your favor of the 23rd inst., tendering to me the position of Attorney-General of this Commonwealth, has been duly received.

I accept the appointment with many thanks for the honor conferred upon me and for the courteous terms in which it has been pleased to tender it. It shall be my earnest effort to discharge the duties of the office to the utmost of my ability.

Very respectfully yours,
[Signed] "JOHN W. GEARY, Governor."

THE FRENCH CABLE QUESTION.

The Paris correspondent of the New York Times says last week the correspondence which has recently been exchanged between the Minister of the Interior and some prominent American citizens—here, in regard to an American cable on the shores of France, in return for the similar permission accorded by our Government to the company of which Messrs. Erlanger and Reuter are representatives. I now forward you the memorial which has been addressed by the gentlemen in question to the Secretary of State at Washington, and which, as it had not been dispatched when I sent you the other letter, I was not in a position to transmit to you.

To Hon. Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State, &c., &c., &c., Washington, D. C.

PURCHASED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE FOR PERMISSION TO LAND A CABLE ON THE SHORES OF FRANCE; also a copy of the reply of the Minister of the Interior, and of the French Government has the exclusive privilege of laying the cable between the United States and the United States.

I do not know what influences may be brought to bear upon the State Department in which this memorial is certain that Messrs. Erlanger and Reuter will lay at nothing to prevent it from being taken into consideration. It is certain that Messrs. Erlanger and Reuter will lay at nothing to prevent it from being taken into consideration. It is certain that Messrs. Erlanger and Reuter will lay at nothing to prevent it from being taken into consideration.

Very respectfully yours,
[Signed] "JOHN W. GEARY, Governor."

THE GOLD RING LEVEL.

What the President Says.

A correspondent of the New York Herald has been boring the President about the changes made against him in connection with the recent fraud in Wall street. He says: "The President pretty sweepingly denied all the statements of Gould and Fisk, except as far as they referred to his public expressions regarding the proposed removal of the Executive. All the assertions that he (the President) had been influenced by Mr. Corbin Logan probably knows more about this subject than a man would. She was a girl who, as we believe, and she would not likely to present a more comprehensive disclosure than any letter—like Horace Greeley's, for instance—who hadn't been a girl, could have done. We are anxious about this letter. There are some things which we hope will explain. If Miss Logan will only tell us what she always says in a street car, we will be glad to believe that she is in her gaiters; why they are always out of practice and can't play without their noses on a self-sacrificing people try to turn them a week, and they are always out of practice.
