The London Railway News, writing on the extension-of-the-railroad-system-in-Great Britain, says: The Portmadoc and Festiniog Railway, The Portmadoc and Festiniog Railway, Wales, is now attracting much attention among scientific men. This is the little line in North Wales, which was originally constructed for the purpose of acting as a tramway for slate and stone from the hills of Merionethshire to the seashore. It is now being used as a regular goods and passenger line. The chief pecularity in its construction is that the gauge is only two feet broad. Hence, though the line runs through a very difficult country, the expenses of construction and working are so small that the traffic yields the enormous revenue of thirty per cent.
