The corporation originally existed as the Pennsylvania Fiscal Association, but its name was afterwards changed to its present style, and it then became instrumental in building the Union Pacific Railroad, after the road had passed the 100th meridian, where it obtained the subsidy promised by Congress to the railway first reaching that point. A contract was made by Oakes Ames to build 666 miles of road, and by him assigned to seven trustees, who agreed to construct the road for the distance, and on condition that the Credit Mobilier would guarantee the performance of the Credit Mobilier a commission of 2½ per cent. and interest on the money advanced for July, 1868s.
