plains is as much a part of her as her nose. Her reading of late has been in Matthew Arnold and thèauthors he has criticised and recommended. Her bricà-brac cridition dresses all the pages, and her heroes are conceived with a woman's nervous determination to carve out great personages. Her art is of course entirely roocco and false. Her book, called "Vashti, or Until Death us do Part," is very neatly put out by Carleton, and sold by Claxton, Remsen & Haffelinger.

Other recent publications by Mr. Carleton are the following, to be found on the shelves of Claxton, Remsen & Haffelinger.

In his monograph on "The Living Writers of the South," James W. Davidson, A. M., accumulates notices of no less than 241 literary persons still alive below Mason and Dixon's line. We think the book a decidedly valuable one. Under the better auspices now favoring the career of letters in the South, we feel sure that she is soon to have a literature; and this book, in which she takes her account of stock, will show exactly with what capital she begins at the close of her greatest crisis. It will surprise a good many people to learn thattwo hundred and oneliving Southerners have published books; forty more are engaged in the profession of literature in one way or another. Of the bookmakers, 74 have written fiction; verse, 112; poetry, 8; in history—including geography, biography, memoirs and travels there are 63; in theology, 20; in science, 15; in philology, 6; in philosophy, 5; in law, 2. The aggregate number of volumes as 739. Mr. Davidson gives a good many examples of the lucubrations of his heroes and heroines; they are of every degree of merit, and it; with the other control of the comment the lucubrations of his heroes and heroines; they are of every degree of merit, and it is a fine trait in the biographer that he does not puff the bad ones. His idea has been, as he frankly explains, "to present Southern writers as they are, not to prove that the South has this or that literature, but only to show what literature the South has." To adhere to such a resolution without partisanship must be very difficult, and it is Mr Davidson's merit that he has done so with integrity. We have but one fault to find. In a work destined to a modest but representation in tives that commit horrible murders on almost every paragraph, confound our geography with that of the Cannibal Islands. We also take it for granted, that our public men will wait for events to justify the crude speculations of the old barbarous times which America has passed dyspeptically through; how to get a husband or wife, in every way suited to the expectations and ideas of different members of the family, and on a scale mathematically adjusted to the pecuniary latitude and longitude calculated from the paternal meridian; how to scale a tariff for conductors, which shall not raise the market profane people to fancy that they are imitatives that commit horrible murders on almost every dashout that our public men will wait for events to justify the crude speculations of the old barbarous times which America has passed dyspeptically through; how to get a husband or wife, in every way suited to the expectations and ideas of different members of the family, and on a scale mathematically adjusted to the pecuniary latitude and longitude calculated from the paternal meridian; how to scale a tariff for conductors, which shall not raise the market profane people to fancy that they are imitations, and deast of different members of the family, and on a scale mathematically adjusted to the pecuniary latitude and longitude calculated from the paternal meridian; how to scale a tariff for conductors, which shall not raise the market profane people to fancy th the lucubrations of his heroes and heroines; I tives that commit horrible murders on almost "Phemie's Temptation," by Marion Harland, is a novel written in violent partisanship of woman's rights. Phemie is represented as a writer, an original character and a gentus,—not always the most agreeable kind of person for a husband to live with. One instinctively feels that Harl's tide of the story is not told.

A divorce concludes this disagreeable novel, which is put forward not as a story with a moral, but as a realistic transformation. We have noticed that a diploma was awarded at the Georgia State Fair to Dr. C. B. Leitner, of Geneva, for a fine specimen of South American cotton. Dr. Leitner yesterday left a boll of this cotton with us, and it is really a variety that deserves attention. The boll is much larger than any cotton boll we ever saw before. The flocks or locks hang down beneath the pod to the length of five and six inches, and these flocks are distinct in their whole length, being five in number. It is easier to believe than to doubt after seeing this boll, that fifty such will weigh a pound! The fibre is fine and silky.

Plans and specifications, with full particulars, may be had on application to the Health and silky.
