consideration to the rage and fear which admitted to the jailer that he was betrothed in marriage to a certain Margnerite of Compiègne. The court therefore had no hesitation in pronouncing him a "purs bigames;" as a married man he had no right to benefit of clergy, so his pretended tonsure was promptly destroyed by shaving, and he was tried and except the courted.

To obtain this, the church of Compostella was stripped of its ornaments, and to convey it safely it was confided to some ecclesiastics proceeding to the Crusade, each man receiving absolution of a year of penance for every ounce of gold that he should succeed in carrying safely. The money was duly paid, when Calixtus complained that his gold casket was partly silver, and demanded 20 ounces of gold to make it good; his chamberlain, moreover.

statesman's high hopes were brought down to a certain satisfaction, or pretended satisfaction, with this poor level of possibility. Chestericld is heroic in his silence; he leaves not a word behind him to express the passionate disappointment, the bitter mortification, with his life." But with all deference to established prejudices, we believe our readers will conclude must have been his as he looked on the commonlace figure of which his amagination had monplace figure of which his imagination had more true conclusion to that strange force of made a hero. Neither to the young man himpaternal love which lasted as long as Chester made a hero. Neither to the young man himself, nor to any of his correspondents; does he bewall the downfall, or blame the heavy soul which thus resisted all his effort. In the silicuce, amid all the gathering shadows of his own infirmities, in his deafness and seclusion and the sufferings of approaching age, the father must have taken his burden to him, and made up his mind to it with a dumb fortitude which is more noble than any speech; his patience, like his love, being half divine. At last the moment arrived when all these anxious preparations were to come to the trial. The boy took his seat in Parliament at the age

f twenty-one; and with "infinite pains" his First Mortgage father attempted "to prepare him for his first appearance as a speaker." "The young man seems to have succeeded tolerably well on the whole," says Dr. Maty, "but on account of his shyness was obliged to stop, and, if I am not mistaken, to have recourse to his notes. Lord Chesterfield used every argument in his power to comfort him, and to inspire him with confidence and courage to make some other attempt; but I have not heard that Mr. Stanope ever spoke again in the House." Thus came to an end all the high expectations with which Chesterfield for twenty years had beguiled his own troubles, the tedium of declining health, of forced inactivity, and an unsuccessful public career. His son had been to mend all and create a new lustre for the fading life; and now the cherished boy had taken his first step, not within the brilliant boundaries of success, but to that flat plain of mediocrity from which no efforts could ever raise him. The event was one of as great im portance in the life of Chesterfield as the loss of an empire, and his personal condition was such as to give every blow of the kind double with pathetic playfulness, as "conversing with my equals the vegetables" in his Blackheath garden immediately after. "All the infirmities in upon me," he says. "I must bear them as THE LINE ONLY WE NOW OFFER THE BONDS well as I can.—they are more or less the lot of humanity, and I have no claim to an exclusive privilege against them. In this situation you may care by registration and otherwise; the will easily suppose that I have no very pleasant interest upon them will be paid out of oneadds the indomitable soul, "I have not one melancholy one, and I rather think my philosophy increases with my infirmities." Thus he takes up his burden with a patience worthy a nobler creed. No more hope for him- ferred by the o dream of tender glory in his boy. Life over, health over, the dear fiction scattered to the winds that had been his joy. But not a word breaks from the father's comhopes and schemes, does he ever acknowledge FECTLY SECURE, OR MORE ABSOLUTELY SAFE. that Philip has failed. Never was there a picture of proud patience, love and self-command Bonds that they bear 7 per cent. gold interest more complete.

Some years after, young Stanhope went to Hamburg as Resident there, a post which his gold bonds, the additional 1 per cent., at comfather immediately, with the strange, halfconscious cunning of affection, represents to himself and everybody else as for the mo- for forty years, $5,003 43.

was refused by the King himself, on account his eagerness to seize every opportunity of advancing or improving both him and his posi-tion less apparent. But the interest of the DE HAVEN & BROTHER reader fails in Philip when his education is over. From the moment we ascertain how little credit he will ever do to all those pains, how little he will ever realize all those hopes, a certain anger and contempt takes possession of the spectator's mind. We are less patient with him than is his father. Indignation takes the place of forbearance. But yet the unfortunate young fellow, forced upwards to a point of attainment which nature for through which it runs, we offer these Bonds with to which his strength was totally unequal, is not without a certain claim upon our sympathy. No doubt his father at the last, opening his sad eyes, came to recognize the limits of nature, and suffered the last pang of paternal pride,—the consent of his own that nothing else was possible the melancholy indulgence of contempt.

After Philip's death a discovery almost miserable was made by his father. The son for whom he had done so much, and with whom he had given up, as it were, the privileges of a father to insure perfect confidence and trust. had contracted a secret marriage, which he had not the courage, even on his deathbed, to reveal. We judge of the effect of this communication or his head of the effect of the second of the effect of the second of the effect of eation only by analogy, for Chesterfield says from him on his son's death, no word of reproach or unkindness disturbs the grave poof whose existence he had no idea. There is something awful in the silence with which the man shrouds his heart,—that heart which had spoken so lavishly, so minutely, so tenderly in the old days. Deaf, old, feeble, racked with f suffering which are permitted to strike us. body and soul, in our most susceptible points, not one cry still breaks from his lips. Half Christian, half Stoic, he stands alone and sees the everything he had loved and trusted crumble everything he had toved and trusted crimble down around him; and says nothing. It is as a polished triffer, a social philosopher, an instance of extreme cultivation, thesse, and falsehood, that the ordinary English reader looks upon Chesterfield; yet there he stands, sad as any prophet, stern as a Roman, natient as a Chrise prophet, stern as a Roman, patient as a Chrisian, forgiving all things, bearing all things. Strange, solemn, almost sublime ending to an For at the very last of all, after all those weiefs, his heart does not close up, as a heart
