Poor beast! he looked as much broken down as broken in." More Bons Mots of Heine. From the "Last Poems and Thoughts of Heine," just published at Hamburgh by Hoffmann & Campe, and from which we obtained some exquisite morsels for our issue of the 15th, we borrow a few more epigrams: The French excel the Germans in the repre sentation of historical subjects, inasmuch as they have a history. The French artist draws upon his experience, the German upon his magination. Buffon said, Le style c'est Phomme. Villemain is the living refutation of this maxim His style is elegant and pure. Mahomet was a camel-driver before his conversion. M. X. was a camel. Girls say "Mr. So-and-so must be very rich for he is very ugly." The public judges by the same rule: "The man must be very learned.

or he is very tiresome." Hence the success f many Germans in Paris. The Germans in Paris fulfil a providential mission—they preserve me from home-sickness. Rothschild and the Communist. Communist nsists upon an equitable division of Rothschild's property. Rothschild sends him his share, mounting to nine sous. "Now let me alone!"
