lyer's Cherry Pectoral For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption. Probably never before in the whole history o nedicine, has anything won so widely and so decily non the confidence of mankind, as this excellent upon the confidence of mankind as this excellent remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through along series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protector against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and the dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a provision against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although settled Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the Lungs and Throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pecng else could reach them, under the Cherry Pec question at length. Money, he argues, is a means to an end; that end the exchange of commodities. It is an instrument to effect a a demonstration that any attempt to reconcommodities. It is an instrument to effect a specific purpose; that purpose exchange. It is a common fallacy, he thinks, that an increase of money will of itself create trade. There is no more currency now affoat, he admits, than is necessary to do the business of the country upon the present scale of prices, and with the multiplicity of exchanges which the redundancy of the currency itself has induced. If the present volume of the currency itself has induced. If the present volume of the currency itself as a demonstration that any attempt to reconstruct the tariff as a whole, on any basis of principle, is practically impossible. There would, therefore, seem to be but one available method of tariff reform, which is to adopt the same course that has been taken in respect to the reforms heretofore made in the internal revenue, and which, furthermore, finds a precedent in all the experience of Great Britain in legislating upon these subjects, viz.: to make such modifications or removals of duties, wear by year, as experience or the condition These estimates show an aggregate destruc-tion of wealth, or diversion of industry which even to the extent of two-fold, the relative of the Treasury may year by year, as experience or the condi-

the natural increase of births over deaths, and from immigration, is, probably, at the rate of 1,100,000 per annum as a minimum.

The number of miles of railway constructed during the past year is estimated at 5,000, making 13,000 since the close of the war.

These roads have opened up 390,000 square miles of new territory for settlement, a tract of country targer than the whole area of France, and nearly three and a half times larger than the whole area of the United States to be 39,000,000,and the average value of the property held by each person to have nominally increased from $451 26 gold in 1860, to $600 eurrency in 1869-70, the present valuation of the United States to be United States to the United States to the same natural proportion to the prices of the same commodities in the United States before the war.

2. The excess is proved by the further fact, that the amount of currency in circulation has been ablitrarily increased during the past two for the supplying of the library and accumulated wealth during the past two points and accumulated wealth during the same time has been by general agreement in very much smaller proportion, and although the increase of population, production, and although the increase of propertion, and although the increase of paper really or nominally divide itself under two heads: First, reforms made purely and solely in the interest of industry from contributions, a small portion only of which accurate the mount of currency. The circulation was not limited by any serious restrictions upon the creation of banks, or the issue of paper really or nominally redeemable in specie. Furthermore, the tendency of all commercial nations is toward the natural proportion of the war.

There is no such thing possible as the resumption and continuance of specie payments with a continuance of our abnormal system of foreign trade and exchanges; and for the simple reason that gold will not stay here, and would long ago have left us to the last dollar, had not the honds of the National Government been available for the settlement of adverse had not the honds of the National Government been available for the settlement of adverse foreign balances in the place of gold. We must reduce prices, so that foreign nations will be willing, because it is for their interest, to exchange product for product. And to accomplish this there must be contraction, for, to reduce prices permanently and equitably, while maintaining seven hundred millions of irredeemable panet money is simply an imposeemable paper money, is simply an impos-
