It was in the thirteenth century that European observers first detected the fact that the magnetic needle does not point due north. For a long time it was supposed that the direction of the needle was the same for all places; but during the first voyage of Christopher Columbus across the Atlantic it was found that this is not the case. He had traveled six hundred miles from the most westerly of the Canary slands, when he noticed that the compass, which had been pointing towards the east of north when he was in Europe, was now pointing due north. The actual day on which the discovery was made was September 13, 1492. As he sailed farther west he found that the westerly declination gradually increased.

But we have at once to call attention to another peculiarity of the magnetic compass, otherwise the reader would form a mistaken notion of the present nature of the needle's decli nation. We have spoken of the needle's pointing to the east of north in 1492. This is no longer a true description of the declination in Europe. The needle now points far to the west of north. It is a peculiarity of the science of terrestrial magnetism that variations are thus mixed up with variations, until it has be-come a matter of exceeding difficulty to present all the facts of the science in such a sequence that the student shall not be in any risk of being led astray. Properly speaking, the change of the needle's declination from time to time should be kept wholly separate from the changes which are noticed as the needle is changed from place to place. Yet, if this were done in describing the original discovery of the latter change, erroneous impressions would be given respecting the present state of the needle's declination in various countries. At present the terrestial globe may be looked upon as divided into two vast but unequal portions, which may be called the region of westerly magnets and the region of easterly magnets. In the former must be included all Europe except the extreme northeasterly parts of Russia, the whole of Africa, Turkey, Arabia, the greater part of the Indian Ocean, and the western parts of Australia. Returning westward, we must add to the region of westerly magnets the greater part of the Atlantic Ocean, the northeastern parts of Brazil, the eastern parts of Canada, and the whole of Greenland. All the rest of the world belongs to the region of easterly magnets except an oval space, which is situated in the very middle Manchooria, and the islands of Japan. Such is the present arrangement of the two divisions; but, fifty years ago, the description would have been incorrect, and fifty years hence it will again be so; for over the whole world the declination is steadily changinghere in one direction, there in the contrary; quickly at some places, almost imperceptibly at others. And we may mention in passing, that as a general rule, where the declination is least either westwards or eastwards, there it is changing most rapidly; and where it is greatest it is hardly changing at all. But there appear to be some places where the range of change is so small that, though the declination is never large, it does not change rapidly—as in other places of small declination. As yet, however, much remains to be learned respecting the progress of these strange changes in countries where magnetic observations have been only commenced in recent times.—Chambers's Journal.

A Murderons Sea Flower.
One of the exquisite wonders of the sea is alled the opelet, and is about as large as the German aster, looking, indeed, very much like one. Imagine a very large double aster with ever so many long petals of a light green, glossy as satin, and each one tipped with rose colo These lovely petals do not lie quietly in their places, like those of the aster in your garden, but wave about in the water, while the opele generally clings to a rock. How innocent and lovely it looks on its rocky bed! Who would suspect that it would eat anything grosser than dew or sunlight? But those beautiful waving arms, as you call them, have another use besides looking pretty. They have to provide food for a large open mouth which is hidden deep down amongst them-so well hidden that one can scarcely find it. Well do they perform their duty, for the instant a foolish little fishlet touches one of the rosy tips, he is struck with poison as fatal to him as lightning. He immediately becomes numb, and in a mo ment stops struggling; and then the other beautiful arms wrap themselves around him, and he is drawn into the huge greedy mouth and is seen no more. Then the lovely arms unclose and wave again in the water, looking as innocent and harmless as though they had never touched a fish.
