When promient men demand this thing of the President. he ought, not only to refuse the request, but to suspect the honesty of those, who make it. nstead of pardons in such cases, we badly need the infliction of Mr. Mountjoy's punishment upon some of his colleagues. the same haughty pretence, and, with a silly affectation of magnanimity, informs the American press that she has not read one of the criticisms upon her disgusting revelations of the alleged Byron scandal. And while on this high horse, Mrs. Stowe indulges in an absurd disclaimer of the idea that she had any eve to a literary venture in the publication of her scandalous story. The press of America and of England wil have but one answer to make to these foolish assumptions of Mrs. Stowe. Being a Beecher. nobody expected her to be quiet, or to acknowledge herself wrong. But it will be remarked that, for a woman who has read none of the criticisms of her unclean work, she has noble object has been nobly carried out by managed to possess herself, pretty thoroughly, the devoted band of young ladies of their nature and substance, and, so far, may still be called womanly. But if it had energy and means to the work; and it is time been that she had read nothing that the press had said about her, what right has she to of pure benevolence should be better underdeduce from the fact the demand that "now. stood and more bountifully sustained by the what you have said with my sublimest contempt-" will you do me the justice to hear me seriously and candidly." Mrs. Stowe evidently her critics; but she demands a full hearing from as I have done you this justice,"—of treating good people of Philadelphia, and that these ladies should be furnished with the means to double or treble their capacity for usefulness. It is a sorrowful thing to have wants to keep up the excitement. She wants decent young women, often miserably to have her forthcoming book elaborately dis- under-paid, to be cast adrift to take cussed by the press. She denies a hearing to care of themselves as best they may in the low, them. She will scarcely find the American press disposed to grant this unreasonable request. The impertment way in which it is prefaced, and the over-dose of this Stowe-Byron business, already administered, will combine to make the American people and paid class of respectable young women, ought HENRY PHILLIPPI, the American press very unwilling to do much to receive the heartiest encouragement from for this latest venture of Mrs. Stowe. The charities of Philadelphia, great and Mrs. Stowe's high-flown denial that her woman who has succeeded in persuading herself that it was her duty to dig up a foul upport should be freely given, not only from THE MAUD WALTZ. scandal,-in all human probability, a foul falsebood,—and trumpet it in the ears of the descendants of the dead poet, can persuade her self of almost anything else. But she will bring very few readers to her way of thinking. The literary speculation is self-evident, at every step. The first article was produced simultaneously in America and England, in a way that showed that Mrs. Stowe had looked out for the best bidders, and her forth-coming book is heralded by its introductory chapter which we publish to-day. The thing is got up to make money, and may prove profitable, though it may be reasonably hoped that the moral tone of the American people is strong enough to reject any further doses of thi auseous stuff. Possibly they may do Mrs. Stowe "one act of justice," and of all her ugly Mrs. Stowe and her brother, Mr. Beeche run their tilts against public sentiment under
