Ship Puritan, Henry, from Bost in the statement that the French Government had simultaneously communicated to the principal continental courts a general project of disarmament. It is still asserted that Gen. Ship Washington Libby, Tapley, sailed from Callao Sharper & Thomson C of Europe. Within two years both France and Austria have, by adopting with certain modifications the military organization of Prussia, converted the whole population into a system of regular armies and reserves. A disarmament would now imply only a reduc-Prussia, converted the whole population into a system of regular armies and reserves. A disarmanuent would now imply only a reduction of the force which is visibly ready to take the field; nor would any power have the stores, the magazines, and the militia regulations of its neighbors.

If France and North Germany had bound themselves by treaty to reduce their respective military establishments; both the contracting purities would be objects of reciprocal jealousy and suspicion. If it became requisite for efther power to arm against some other adversary, it would be necessary to furnish full diplomatic explanations which might or might not be regarded as satisfactory. The French Government would be investigated by the opposition with undue deforence to Prussia: and the force allowed by the treaty would be practically regarded as the extreme limit of possible reduction. If any serious dispute arise during the continuance of the treaty, preparations which might in any other circumstances have been offensive would supply a sufficient cause for remonstrance and resentment: and, as in the case of the Commorcial Trenty, the termination of a temporary arrangement would be regarded as equivalent to the reversal of a pacific policy.

If overtures for disarmament have really been discountenanced by Russia or by any other great military power, the Emperor Napoleon will have provided by anticipation a conveption and a conveption and resentments, it is necessary for France to be always ready to uphold her position in Europe; yet there is no State of the first order which could so well affort to find addition at 45 cents.
